

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE first edition of this first volume appeared in 1880, the second in 1882. I have done my best to make the third edition worth procuring even for those who already possess the first. Very many passages will reveal traces of a revision which, if not so thorough as that which Delitzsch is in the habit of giving, is yet not superficial, and which witnesses to the author's belief that in the study of the prophets nothing is trivial or insignificant. The results of Assyriological research have again, to the best of my power, been sifted and utilised, so that M. Maspero's complaint that 'les hébraïsants rejettent systématiquement l'aide que pourrait leur offrir l'antiquité égyptienne et assyrienne' less than ever applies to the present work. I may have erred, but it seemed worthier of a student of the Old Testament to qualify himself to some extent for a personal judgment, than either to stand aloof and wait for others, or to transfer in pellmell confusion all the various illustrations of the Old Testament proposed by Assyriologists. Something, too, has been attempted for the further correction of the text; the slowness with which I have, since my first contributions in 1868, moved towards critical independence will, I hope, be a guarantee that I have no

parti pris against tradition. The 'critical notes' in the second volume have received numerous additions ; and if I am to a great extent eclectic, yet there will be found evidence of personal judgment and mature principle. How far any fresh light has been thrown in this edition on the meaning and the progress of religious ideas I cannot venture to say. I have, at any rate, proved my continued adherence to the historical principles gained long since from Ewald. A not unfriendly reviewer, from the secure vantage-ground of a German university, has, I observe, accused me of theological bias in some parts of the exegesis in the second volume, though he as good as acquits me of any in the first. I have re-examined the sentences in which such a bias may be detected in the first, and will make some reply to him in the preface to the second volume. It will be easy, for there is no fundamental difference between us. But I may at least ask here, Where is the commentary entirely free from theological or philosophical bias ? It has, at any rate, been my own object, as a commentator, to confine my theological bias within the narrowest possible area, and to meet the curiosity which in England is so generally felt as to the tendencies of an author in one of the essays attached to the commentary. The same remark applies to my critical bias. I cannot pretend to be without at least provisional conclusions. I am not so modest as to think that I have made no contributions to critical thought. These conclusions or contributions may here and there have influenced my exegesis, but not, as I think, unduly ; and certainly not so much as the bias of more orthodoxly critical commentators both of the 'right' and of the 'left' has affected their exegesis. My constant effort has been to suppress myself as a critic as much as possible, though I considered myself bound, as far as I could, to acquaint the student (see Essay VI.) with the present state of one important part of the critical controversy. In this connection I may quote a sentence or two from the preface to the first edition of this volume. 'It appears to the author that a more thorough exegesis must (in England and America) precede the fruitful investigation of critical problems. It is the interest of all parties to ascertain the exegetical data, and these he has endeavoured to set down impartially, without allowing himself to be deterred by accusations of inconsistency, such as even his earlier work<sup>1</sup> was exposed to from the Speaker's Commentary on Isaiah. If it is a fact that the exegetical phenomena are conflicting, let them be fairly represented as such; the final critical solution will have to take account of all the data of the problem.'

The prospects of Old Testament study in England are more hopeful now than when I first began to write. Free and reverent investigation is at least sincerely tolerated, though within my own range of observation it has not received much countenance from the authorities. We have still to live in hope in this as in so many other respects. A single professorship at each of our national universities will not always be held sufficient for a study which ramifies in so many directions as that of the Old Testament.<sup>2</sup> If I may refer to but one of its departments, Old Testament Exegesis has, so far as I am aware, no official recognition in the English universities, though, at Oxford at least, the interpretation of the New Testament is not unfairly represented by two learned professors. Isolated students of this and other sections of the subject may no doubt be found, but what the study requires is a small band of qualified scholars who are at the same time teachers, and who have distributed among themselves the different departments of this wide field of research. As yet we hear little said about these things in the organs of Church and University opinion, and it may therefore be unfair to expect much help from those who officially have the means of giving it. But the horizon is, as I said, not without gleams of hope. Men of the younger generation, trained in a more historic school than their elders, are at least friendly to critical investigations; and if the energies of most of them are absorbed by the questions of the hour, yet there are some left who can give more than a friendly regard, and to those I appeal, out of my unwilling seclusion, to take their part distinctly and ungrudgingly, in spite of all discouragements, in a work of which few can estimate the beneficial results, and for the want of which not only philology, but theology and the Church in general suffer—the application of modern methods to the criticism and exegesis of the Old Testament.

<sup>1</sup> This work on Isaiah, published in 1870, contained an amended version, which aimed at reconciling in some degree English style and Hebrew scholarship. Mr. Matthew Arnold (in his Isaiah of Jerusalem) censures the translation in the present work precisely as if its object was the same as that of my earlier attempt. I have not recalled the latter; indeed, it partly supplements the present work, especially in the introduction, which contains a moderate statement of the anti-traditional point of view scarcely as yet superseded.

<sup>2</sup> I am most glad to be able to refer to the Inaugural Lecture of Professor Driver at Oxford (as reported in the Times), which expresses all that I could wish. Compare also the sketch of the field of Old Testament study in my own Essay on the Maintenance of the Study of the Bible in Essays on the Endowment of Research (Lond., 1876). To the practical suggestions of that essay I should not now commit myself.

*•* The reader will kindly refer to the 'Critical Notes' and 'Last Words' in the second volume, which sometimes explain or illustrate the translation and commentary, and especially to the emendations of the text due to the late Dr. Weir, Professor of Hebrew in the University of Glasgow. Specimens of Dr. Weir's exegesis have also been given; but this, though generally sober, and sometimes very clear-sighted, is by no means so remarkable as his criticism of the text. I am much indebted to Dr. Weir's representatives for permission to examine his note-books, and am glad thus to honour the memory of a singularly fresh and candid mind.

ADDENDUM.—On xliv. 4 (p. 283). There is great doubt whether the best Massoretic reading is בְּיָדָי 'amidst' (?), or בְּיָדָי 'as amidst' (י being defective) or 'as young (grass).' The Sept. reading is preferable.

ISAIAH.

CHAPTER I.

X 'THE Great Arraignment' is the title appropriately suggested by Ewald for this prophecy. Jehovah is the plaintiff, Israel the defendant, the prophet a deeply interested bystander and interlocutor. Hence the prophecy naturally falls into four symmetrical stanzas or strophes, dividing at vv. 10, 18, 24 (Ewald, Drechsler). Str. I. contains the charge, with an appeal to the witnesses; II. meets a preliminary objection of Israel's to the production of a charge; III. offers reconciliation on condition of Israel's amendment; IV. fulminates the judgment which the rejection of this gracious offer renders inevitable. The prophecy begins by addressing the whole people as equally guilty; then directs itself more especially to the higher classes; and, last of all, anticipates that some will be converted, and so escape destruction. There is no finer specimen of prophetic oratory than this (see on v. 10).

It is difficult to say when this prophecy was most probably composed, or rather, it was difficult in the infancy of Assyrian studies. Hence we find, among the elder critics, Caspari<sup>1</sup> referring to the period of Uzziah and Jotham; Ges. and Knob. to that of Ahaz; Vittr., Hitz., Ewald, to that of Hezekiah. The fact is that, in some respects, it might have been written almost equally well in any one of these periods, which suggests that it was designed, in its present form, as a preface to a larger or smaller collection of Isaiah's prophecies. Still it would be strange if Isaiah had been able altogether to exclude references to passing events, nor does he appear to have done so. He tells us that the land of Judah has been flooded with a foreign soldiery—'your land, strangers devour it' (v. 7), a description which points rather to the Assyrians than to an army partly composed of Israelites (vii. 1). There are no points of contact between this prophecy and those composed (see e.g. chap. xxxiii.) with reference to Sennacherib's invasion. It must therefore have been composed before that event,—not after it (Oort), as there is no allusion to the collapse of the Assyrian enterprise. There seems no alternative but to suppose Isaiah to refer to the first Assyrian invasion of Judah, viz. that of Sargon.<sup>2</sup> He wrote, probably, after the stress of the storm had passed, or even when the invasion was over, for during a calamity it was not his wont to speak so roughly and discouragingly. Indeed, he speaks quite as much to the next generation as to the men of his own time; it is a purely literary product that we have before us. As he depicts the sufferings caused by the invasion (vv. 7-9), he deepens the shadows to impress the future readers of his prophecies. He offers not so much a realistic account of what actually took place, as what might and must result from a continued neglect of true religion. (From this point of view, comp. the ἐγκαταλειφθήσεται of LXX. and the derelinquetur of Vulg.) And yet his description is based upon facts, and is not entirely imaginative. The sketch of the moral and religious condition of Judah applies at any rate to some extent to the reign of Hezekiah, whose reformation was only superficial. The crimes imputed to the princes in vv. 15, 18, 21 (only mentioned again in Isaiah's earliest discourses, iv. 4, v. 7), and the openness of the 'apostasy,' are no less characteristic of the reign of Ahaz, to which Delitzsch still refers it. The theory that chap. i., though written in the reign of Hezekiah, was designed as an introduction to prophecies of various periods, enables us to reconcile all the conflicting data.

<sup>1</sup> The heading, in its present form, belongs to the whole of the prophecies of Isaiah. There may, however, have been a time when it stood at the head of a smaller portion of prophecy, for the words 'concerning Judah and Jerusalem' do not suit all the prophecies. Vitringa supposes the heading to have been originally written for chap. i., and to have had the concluding words ('in the days of, &c.) added to it by the scribes who collected Isaiah's works into a volume. But as the very similar heading to chap. ii. belongs to a group of prophecies (ii.-v.), it is reasonable to suppose that the heading of chap. i. once did likewise. It cannot, indeed, have been penned by Isaiah, if (as is most probable) none of the prophecies were really written in the reign of Uzziah. Here, as in the case of the headings of the Psalms, we seem driven to assume the handiwork of the scribes during the Exile, a period when the study of the religious writings formed the chief consolation of the pious. The same writer, or writers, may have prefixed the headings of Hosea and Micah, and perhaps of some of the other books, also of Isaiah ii. and xiii. (note the similarity of form). — Vision]. Perhaps collectively for 'visions'; occurs again in the headings of Nahum and Obadiah. A technical term for the prophetic intuitions or inward perceptions. A synonymous phrase is 'hearing' (xxviii. 22; comp. xxi. 10). He who 'makes to see' is of course Jehovah (Am. vii. 1), through the objective influence of His Spirit (see on viii. 11). Thus 'vision' = prophetic revelation (comp. i Sam. iii. 15), just as 'seer' = prophet; but while 'seer' was early supplanted by 'prophet' (nabî), i Sam. ix. 9, 'vision' held its ground till a much later time (Dan. ix. 23, i Chr. xvii. 15). 'Prophecy' (n'bu'ah), only occurs thrice (2 Chr. ix. 29, xv. 8, Neh. vi. 12). — And Jerusalem] i.e. especially Jerus., Isaiah being distinctively a city-prophet.

ear, O earth, for Jehovah speaketh: sons I have made great and high, and they have broken away from me. <sup>3</sup>The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass its master's crib: Israel is without knowledge, my people is without understanding. <sup>4</sup>Alas for the sinful nation, the people burdened with guilt, the seed of evil doers, the sons that do corruptly: they have forsaken Jehovah, they have spurned Israel's Holy One, they have withdrawn backward. <sup>5</sup>Why<sup>a</sup> will ye be still smitten,

Bear witness to the judicial sentence which Jehovah is about to deliver (cf. Deut. iv. 26, xxx. 19, xxxi. 28, Ps. l. 4, Jer. vi. 19); or, since Jehovah is speaking rather in sorrow than in anger, Listen with reverence to Jehovah your Creator, whom His rational creatures refuse to hear, cf. Jer. ii. 12. Many find here an allusion to Deut. xxxii. 1, but (apart from the question as to the date of Deuteronomy) there is so much greater depth of feeling in the passage of Isaiah that one is loth to admit an imitation. The expressions (see Lowth) are the common property of poets. The tenderness of these opening verses reminds us of Hosea, as the section vv. 10-20 reminds us by its severity of Amos. —[Sons] This word is placed in the forefront to account for the singular favours about to be mentioned. What can a loving parent refuse to his sons? —[I have made great and high] i.e., I have reared Israel to maturity, and set him on high among the nations. Comp. Hos. i. 10 —[Rebelled] The highest degree of sin. 'For he addeth unto his sin rebellion,' Job xxxiv. 37, '... sons of the living God' (xi. 1, Ex. iv. 22).

alienation, insult, idolatry. On the implication in the last phrase, see Ezek. xiv. 3. It is, however, not so much outward idolatry which is referred to, as the idolatry of the heart; see on v. 21. —[Israel's Holy One] i.e., He who shows himself holy in the midst of Israel. Holiness is an idea which has had a long history, and it is not easy to realize it in its original simplicity. In Isaiah's mind, however, it evidently stood in close relation to the conception of the Divine glory. In vi. 3 the Trisagion is accompanied by 'The whole earth is full of his glory.' But Isaiah himself indicates a distinction already developed between God's glory and His holiness. The sense of creaturely weakness is awakened by the thought of the one (vi. 5, first clause), the consciousness of transgression by that of the other (vi. 5, second and foll. clauses); and this because, whereas the glory of God extends over all nature, His holiness is specially exhibited in judicial interpositions within the sphere of His kingdom. And yet the Israelites, who owed so much to these interpositions, displayed, not contrite awe but insulting contempt, (On Holiness see Oehler, Theology of the Old Testament, i. 154, &c., Duhm, Die Theologie der Propheten, 169-172; Baudissin, Studien zur semit. Religionsgeschichte, ii. 1-142, Delitzsch, art. 'Heiligkeit' in Herzog-Plitt's Real-Encyclopädie, Krüger, Essai sur la théologie d'Esaié xl.-lxvi., pp. 19-26.)

going on in apostasy? Every <sup>b</sup> head is sick, and every <sup>b</sup> heart faint. <sup>6</sup> From the sole of the foot even to the head there is no sound part in it; wounds and wales and festering sores—not pressed, and not bound up, and not softened with oil. <sup>7</sup> Your land—a desolation, your cities—burnt with fire, your tillage—in your face strangers devour it; even a desolation, like the overthrow of <sup>c</sup> Sodom. <sup>8</sup> And the daughter of Zion is left as a booth in a vineyard, as a lodging-place in a cucumber-bring down fresh judgments upon your head through persisting in your infidelity? Kay well compares Ezek. xviii. 31. (On the rend. see Del. and Kay.)—Every head is sick . . . ] Instead of descending from the public to the private calamity, the prophet adopts the more striking plan of ascending from the individual to the body corporate. He singles out the two noblest members of the body, the seats of the intellectual and moral life. There is not a head nor a heart which has escaped the infection of sin. Cf. Jer. xvii. 9. 'The heart is . . . woefully sick,' Gen. viii. 21.

<sup>6</sup> From the sole . . . ] It is the state which is thus characterised (cf. x. 16, xvii. 4). The meaning of the figures is determined by that of the figures in v. 5. The inward sickness of the individual produces a mass of moral corruption in the nation, and no attempt has been made to apply a remedy. 'Binding up' is a well-known figure for spiritual regeneration, Hos. xiv. 4, Ps. xli. 4. 'To heal' (rāṣā) in Hebrew means properly to sew up a wound.

<sup>7</sup> The condition of the land is as sad as that of the people. The wild soldiery of Sargon has wrought a ruin only comparable to that of Sodom. But the men of Sodom were foreigners, Israel is a 'son.' It was a painful surprise to the Israelites that their land could become the prey of the Gentiles, comp. lxiii. 19, Jer. x. 25. [On the reading, see crit. note. The text-read. seems to me scarcely translatable. The conjecture ' . . . of a rain-storm' is plausible (comp. Ps. xc. 5); but 1, the verb 'overtum' is specially appropriated to the 'catastrophe' of Sodom and Gomorrah (lxiii. 19, Am. iv. 11, Jer. xlix. 18, l. 40, Deut. xxix. 23 [22], and 2, we should not expect, in so artistically composed a chapter, to find šrem so close to šarim—a confusion would be unavoidable.]

<sup>8</sup> There is one qualification to be made; the capital remains, but how forlorn and helpless! See Notes and Criticisms, p. 2.—The daughter of Zion] A highly poetical phrase, here and in general a personification of the city and inhabitants of Jerusalem. Sometimes, however, it seems to mean the city without the inhabitants (Lam. ii. 8); sometimes the inhabitants without the city (Mic. iv. 10).—As a booth . . . a lodging-place] Temporary shelters for the watchmen. See xxiv. 20, xxvii. 3 (note), Job xxvii. 18; also Trench's instructive note, Parables, p. 195, and Wetzstein's in Delitzsch, Hiob, p. 318.—As a besieged city] This is very difficult to harmonise with the preceding figures. Can Isaiah have written thus? Dr. Weir's conjecture is very ingenious. True, Jerusalem had walls, but it might as well have been without them, for the Assyrian 'despiseth cities' (or citadels), xxxiii. 8. See the Hebr. of Prov. xxv. 28, 2 Chr. xxxii. 5.

<sup>9</sup> The first revelation closes with a reflection in the name of the people. It is touching to see how the prophet's human feelings force an utterance. He seems to feel that the statement in v. 7 was too strong:—‘not yet quite like Sodom.’ Jehovah Sabáoth] The phrase is used as a kind of seal or attestation to a specially solemn prophecy. This has become almost a rule with most of the prophets. Yet there are some exceptions, as Ewald remarks. Hosea, Ezekiel, and Micah (if, as many critics think, iv. 1–4 is quoted by Micah from another prophet) avoid it altogether. Jehovah Sabáoth is, I think, a fuller, and more expressive proper name for the God (primarily) of Israel: more expressive than Jehovah alone in that it lays special stress on his supra-mundane being, thus becoming equivalent to the latter phrase ‘the God of heaven,’ 2 Chr. xxxvi. 23, Neh. i. 4, 5, Ps. cxxxvi. 26, (Gen. xxiv. 3, 7?), &c. See also Appendix to this chapter.

<sup>10</sup> Yet strange to say, the principal men of Jerusalem think they have completely discharged their religious obligations. A second revelation dispels this illusion. By an apostrophe which Steinthal the philologist pronounces unequalled, the prophet addresses them as Judges of Sodom (comp. iii. 9, and with Dr. Kay, Deut. xxxii. 32). Into this short phrase he condenses the philosophy of their misfortunes. So severe a punishment argues a more than commonly heinous offence. Out of this passage perhaps the Arabs have distilled the proverb, ‘More unjust than a kadée of Sodom’ (kadī = kātsin, the word used by Isaiah, and in a similar context by Micah iii. 9). Obs., no mention is made of the king. The judges seem to have acquired the whole executive power, and to have greatly impaired the royal prerogative (cf. Jer. xxxviii. 5).—The instruction of our God] A. V. renders ‘the law,’ implying, as usual, a reference to the Mosaic law. This, however, is doubtful at best. The word (Tōrah), rendered ‘teaching,’ means etymologically, ‘direction,’ or ‘instruction,’ and hence was the suitable term for the authoritative counsel given orally by the priests (Deut. xvii. 11) and prophets to those who consulted them on points of ritual and practice respectively. It is unsafe, therefore, in the majority of passages to render Tōrah ‘law’ (with A.V.), when ‘instruction’ or ‘revelation’ will suit all the requirements of the context. See Isa. ii. 3, viii. 16, xlii. 4, Jer. xviii. 18, Ezek. vii. 26, Hag. ii. 11, Zech. vii. 12; and especially Jer. xxvi. 4, 5, where, ‘to walk in my Tōrah’ is parallel to ‘to hearken to the words of my servants the prophets.’ There are, indeed, a few passages where some modern critics render Tōrah ‘law.’ ‘The written law of Moses had come into general acceptance from the days of Josiah,’ and ‘the “law” already presented itself during the Exile as the one lofty object which, despised and rejected now, would in the future once more win from all mankind a lofty reverence and unique acknowledgment.’ So writes Ewald, referring to Isa. xlii. 4, 21, li. 4, 7, Lam. ii. 9 (20), Ezek. vii. 26 (History of Israel, v. 133). Even here, however, the sense ‘(prophetic) revelation’ is quite satisfactory. The Book of 11 Isaiah is not conear to the instruction of our God, ye people of Gomorrah.

 11 Of what use is the multitude of your sacrifices to me? saith Jehovah; I am satiated with the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts, and in the blood of bullocks and lambs and he-goats I have no pleasure. 12 When ye come to 'see my face,'<sup>f</sup> who hath required this at your hands—to trample cerned with legal ordinances; Ezek. vii. 26 is explained by Deut. xvii. 11; and in Lam. ii. 9 Tōrah is parallel to '(prophetic) vision.' The only absolutely certain reference to the Pentateuch is in Mal. iv. 4. (Am. ii. 4, and Hos. viii. 12 appear to allude to early compends of laws.) The context, however, shows that such a reference cannot be intended here, and that Tōrah means the revelation which Isaiah is about to communicate.

11 The 'judges of Sodom' may multiply sacrifices, but Jehovah attaches no value to them. Not that Isaiah intends to condemn ritual altogether, any more than St. James does (i. 26, 27). His utterance must be qualified by what he tells us himself of his early vision (see vi. 6), and by a consideration of his circumstances. He was not only a prophet, but a reformer, or at any rate the friend of a reforming king, and it is not probable that he was inwardly hostile to the very foundations of the established order of things. It is true, however, that the duties of religion which he most inculcates are the moral ones, and that he is no friend to the existing priesthood (xxviii. 7). He seems rather to tolerate forms than to recommend them. For statements of contemporary prophets, see Am. v. 21-24, Hos. vi. 6 ('and not sacrifice'—'more than burnt-offerings'), Mic. vi. 6-8.—[Sacrifices] Isaiah means those in which the life of a victim was taken. Of this class, the most important were the burnt-offerings. The mention of rams may perhaps point to guilt-offerings (see on liii. 10), the only kind of sacrifice limited to a ram in Leviticus. Or, if our Leviticus be of late date, the 'rams' may be a vestige of the high estimate of rams in primitive times (cf. Gen. xxii. 13). 'Fat' is mentioned because, except in burnt-offerings, the fat pieces were burnt; 'blood,' because in all the sacrifices of this class the blood was sprinkled on the altar.

12 To see my face] (On reading, see crit. note.) To 'see God,' men must be 'pure in heart' (Matt. v. 8), or, in the words of a Psalmist, 'the upright shall behold his countenance' (Ps. xi. 7). It is therefore a purely formal and imaginary seeing which the prophet refers to—a vestige probably of that unspiritual stage when the Israelites worshipped God under the form of images (Judg. xvii. 3, 4, 1 Kings xii. 28, 29). The prohibition of idolatry did not extinguish this merely formal religion, for the invisible God could still, it was thought, be propitiated through the Temple-ritual. It was not everyone who could reconcile the sanctity of the Temple with the illimitable character of the Divine Being as it is reconciled in the beautiful 'prayer of Solomon' (1 Kings viii. 27-30). The phrase, 'to see God,' is therefore a relic of what may be called roughly the pre-prophetic or pre-Mosaic age. It is not merely, as Hupfeld thinks, a metaphor from a royal court, into which only a select few could have ingress. The 'face of God' was no doubt a symbolic expression, but one of a less commonplace order than the eminent critic supposes. It represents in the old Semitic religious systems generally that aspect of the Divine

Being which was turned towards man; and this aspect, it may be added, was regarded as personal (comp. Ex. xxxiii. 14). Does not this seem to explain the prayer in Ps. xvii. 15, 'May I be satisfied, when I awake, with thine image' (comp. Ps. xli. 12)? See also on lix. 2.—To trample my courts] Like the oxen led in to sacrifice; so formal is your attendance.

<sup>13</sup> False offerings] i.e., hypocritical sacrifices, contrasted with 'right' ones in Ps. iv. 5, li. 20. Minkhah is here taken in its primary sense of 'gift,' as in Gen. iv. 3, 5, 1 Sam. ii. 17, Mal. i. 10; and in the common phrase, 'the evening sacrifice.' Dr. Kay, with Ew., Del., &c., adopts the secondary and more common sense of 'meal-offering.' But why should the least important kind of sacrifice be singled out? After the mention of the 'courts,' we expect at least an implicit reference to bloody offerings. The reason why so many adopt the less natural rendering is the supposed reference to incense in the next clause (see Lev. ii. 2). But the word they render 'incense' (Kibret) means properly 'a sweet smoke,' as in Ps. lvi. 15, 'with the sweet smoke of rams' (see Hupfeld [ad loc.], Deut. xxxiii. 10 [where parallel to 'whole burnt offerings']).

—The new moon . . . convocation] This corresponds to the division in a much later book, 'the sabbaths, the new moons, and the solemn feasts' (2 Chr. viii. 13). The calling or proclaiming of convocation belonged properly to the great festivals (Lev. xxiii. 4), though, apparently by an afterthought, to give greater honour to the Sabbath, the weekly festival also receives the name of 'convocation' (ibid. v. 3). 'Convocations' form an integral part of Isaiah's sketch of a regenerated Zion (iv. 5). For the new moon, see Num. x. 10, xxviii. 11–16.—I cannot bear . . .] Before he has completed one construction, he begins another; he is carried away by indignation. Such strictness in ritual combined with such moral laxity! (Utrumque simul, as de Dieu puts it.)

<sup>15</sup> Many prayers] Forms of prayer are nowhere directly ordained in the existing Pentateuch, though patterns of prayer are given for special occasions, Num. vi. 23–26, Deut. xxvi. 5–10, 13–15. 'The men of the Great Assembly' (i.e., the Scripturists who succeeded Ezra) were the first to prescribe a definite form of prayer ('Berachoth f. 28b, 29a').—Full of blood] i.e., guilty of judicial murders (comp. v. 7). Perhaps, however, 'bloodshed' may be put by synecdoche for 'violent conduct leading to the ruin of others,' the 'soul' or vital principle being 'in the blood.' This view may be supported by lix. 3, Deut. xxxii. 40, Mic. iii. 10, Prov.

<sup>17</sup> Righten] Bring into the right way. In these verses we seem to have an echo of the justice-loving Amos (see chap. v.) who was senior to Isaiah. — Plead for the widow] i.e., let not the want of an advocate (no uncommon thing in the court of a modern kaddee) prevent you, the judges, from doing justice to her.

<sup>18</sup> Let us bring our dispute to an end] 'Let us reason together' (A.V.) is a misleading translation; the Divine Judge in this passage does not reason, but commands amendment. — Though . . . white as snow] We must not explain this on the analogy of a passage in a much later work, Ps. li. 7. There, no doubt, a free and unconditional pardon is attached to an unreserved repentance and humble trust in God's mercy. But the repentance required by Isaiah is a trifle compared with that of Ps. li.; it is comparatively external, and does but touch the surface of the conscience. It is not spiritual joy (as in Ps. li. 8, 12) which is promised in Isaiah, but the enjoyment of the fruits of the land. This is guaranteed on condition of a reformation in practice. The promise in v. 18 is conditioned by v. 19a, just as the promises in lviii. 8, 9a are conditioned by vv. 9b, 10. There is a curious application of this passage to the times of the last good high priest, Simeon the Just, in the Talmud; see Derenbourg, Hist. de la Palestine, p.

<sup>19,20</sup> The good of the land] All outward blessings shall be yours, Obs. the antithesis, 'shall ye eat' . . . 'shall ye be eaten.' The sword is personified, as in xxxiv. 5, 6.

<sup>21</sup> How hath become . . .] This short, plaintive strain need not be a verse of a current song (Roorda), for lyricsnatches are not uncommon in the Prophets, and the idea is that of v. 7. Comp. for the form, Lam. i. 1. It is the prophet who speaks, in the manner of a Greek chorus, to fill up the pause, while the bystanders are anxiously waiting, but waiting in vain, for Israel's reply. — A harlot] Even heathen religions supposed a mysterious union to exist between a god and his worshippers (see on xliiv. 11), symbolised by the marriage relation. To the heathen, however, this union was a hereditary physical one; to the Old Test. writers it was more than this—a devotion of the heart to Jehovah. Hence every moral delinquency could be described as adultery. It is in a moral sense that Jerusalem is called 'a harlot' by Isaiah, as the context proves. So in Ps. lxxiii. 26, 27 (quoted by Oehler), the pious man who says, 'My heart's rock and my portion is God,' is opposed to 'those who commit whoredom away from thee;' and so our Lord calls the Scribes and Pharisees an 'adulterous generation' (Matt. xii. 39). — Faithful city] i.e., faithful to her divine hus-that was full of justice ; righteousness was wont to lodge in her, but now assassins ! <sup>22</sup> Thy silver is become dross, thy choice drink thinned with water. <sup>23</sup> Thy law-makers are law-breakers and in partnership with thieves ; every one loveth a bribe, and pursueth rewards ; to the orphans they do not justice, and the cause of the widow cometh not unto them.

<sup>24</sup> Therefore—it is an oracle of the Lord, Jehovah Sabáoth, the Hero of Israel : Ha ! I will appease me through mine adversaries, and avenge me on mine enemies, <sup>25</sup> and will bring back my hand upon thee, smelting out as with lye thy dross, and will take away all thy alloy ; <sup>26</sup> and I will band ; comp. Hos. ii. —To lodge] i.e., to find a hospitable reception (lit. to pass the night). —Assassins] The word indicates that they made murder an art or profession (so Hos. vi. 9).

<sup>23</sup> Paronomasia, as in Hos. ix. 15, law-breakers] With reference to the Tōrah, or (not so much ‘law’ as) directions given from time to time by the prophets. —Thieves] i.e., the unjust rich who appeared before their tribunal and bribed them with a share of their plunder (comp. iii. 13). Dr. Kay well compares Ps. l. 18. —A bribe] Comp. Mic. vii. 3 (an expansion of Isaiah’s phrase).

<sup>24</sup> Oracle] Etymologically, whisper ; a phrase possibly mythic in its origin (comp. on viii. 19), but no doubt retained as an apt symbol of the hidden action of the supernatural. Comp. Job iv. 12–16. —Of the Lord . . .] Such an accumulation of Divine names is found nowhere else in Isaiah (Del.). They express the manifoldness of the Divine power. —The Hero of Israel] ‘Hero,’ an uncommon word in the Heb. (see crit. note), only found in combination with Israel (as here), and with Jacob, as in xlix. 26, lx. 16 ; also in the original passage, Gen. xlix. 24, and in Ps. cxxxii. 2, 5 —I will appease myself] In the next clause we have ‘avenge myself.’ In fact, the two verbs are almost the same in pronunciation, and spring from the same root, meaning ‘to fetch one’s breath,’ ‘to give vent to a strong emotion.’ The context clearly shows that the relation of God to man thus indicated is not, in the sense of the prophet, occasioned by caprice, but by the holiness of the Divine nature (comp. Ps. xviii. 26, 27). ‘The standpoint of the inspired writers is a spiritual realism, alike removed from both spiritualism [in the philosophical sense] and materialism’ (Martensen, Christian Ethics, p. 71).

<sup>25–27</sup> With a few pen-strokes the prophet sums up the spiritual future of Israel. First of all, he corrects the description in vv. 22, 23.

—Bring back my hand upon thee] The phrase is generally used of punishment (Ps. lxxxix. 14, Amos i. 8) ; here, however, as in Zech. xiii. 7, a favourable sense predominates, though the Divine favour was necessarily preceded by the removal of the causes of indignation. ‘Quod dicitur, reducam manum meam ad te, si in te spectes, vel ad castigantem vel ad sanantem et beneficam manum referri potest. Sed posterius hic obtinet, quicquid alii reclamant.’ Vitringa. —As with lye] or potash (Job ix. 30), which was used as a flux in purifying metals.

ber to thy good the kindness of thy youth, the love of thy bridal state, thy following of me in the wilderness, in a land unsown' (Jer. ii. 2). The regeneration of Israel is to be as great an event as its first foundation on a religious basis by Moses, Joshua, and Samuel. In support of this explanation of the phrase, see lii. 4, Jer. vii. 12.

—[Citadel of righteousness] Vitringa and Naeg. see a connection between this passage and the names of Melchizedek (Gen. xiv. 18) and Jehovah Tsidkenu (Jer. xxxiii. 15; cf. xxiii. 6). But in both names the righteousness spoken of has a different shade of meaning from the righteousness mentioned here. The former is God's righteousness, His faithful adherence to his revealed principles of action (Melchisedek means 'King-righteousness,' the King being God); the latter, the righteousness of man to man, civil justice.

<sup>27</sup> Shall be delivered] A.V. 'redeemed'; but this is not the primary meaning of the word (padak) and is often unsuitable; comp. Job vi. 23. The idea is that of cutting loose.—[Through justice . . . through righteousness] This may mean either the judicial manifestation of God's righteousness (so Del.), cf. v. 16, or the righteousness of the people of Zion, especially of their new judges (so the Rabbis, followed by Ew., Hitz., Knob.). The latter is favoured by the context (see esp. v. 21), and is in harmony with Isaiah's severe advocacy of the moral law. Vitringa calls this

'doctrina damnabilis superbiae,' but forgets Matt. v. 20.—[Her converts] Lit. her turning ones; i.e., the escaped remnant which shall turn unto 'God-the-Mighty-One' (x. 21), 'when the Lord shall finish his whole work upon mount Zion, (x. 12). Isaiah's first allusion to this great doctrine. From v. 21 it is clear that the remnant, in the mind of Isaiah, was to consist of the poor and weak, who alone had the germ of humility required by the fear of Jehovah. A clearer statement still in xxix. 19, 20.

<sup>28</sup> The first clause, having no verb, is to be taken as an exclamation; it is explained in the more complete clause which follows.—[Rebels] or renegades. Those who have inwardly and outwardly 'broken away from' Jehovah (same word v. 2).—[Sinners] Those who lead a life of open sin.—[Together] i.e., without exception. [Those who forsake Jehovah] Those who in the one way or the other have alienated themselves from God.

<sup>29</sup> Ashamed] Not in the sense of Rom. vi. 21; it is the disappointingness of nature-worship which is indicated.—[The gardens] or, the groves. These are hardly pleasure-gardens (Hitz.), for there is a contrast between 'forsaking Jehovah' and 'choosing the gardens.' Groves were the scenes of the worship of Asherah, the Canaanitish goddess of fertility and good fortune (xvii. 8); see lvii. 5, lxi. 17, 2 Kings xvi. 4; and comp. Juvenal, Sat. iii. 13, vi.

as a terebinth whose leaves are withered, and as a garden that hath no water ; <sup>31</sup> and the strong one shall become tow, and his work a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none quencheth.

545. Votive offerings may still be seen hanging upon trees on the east side of the Jordan (Peschel, Völkerkunde, p. 261).

<sup>31</sup> The strong one] The mighty and rich (the word will cover both meanings) will refuse conversion, and suffer destruction. — His work] i.e., his idol, cf. xli. 29, lvii. 12 (synonymous word). Or, his gains (Caspari). The meaning is, his sin contains the germ of his ruin : 'per quod quis peccat, per idem punitur et ipse.' See further on <sup>an</sup>v. 18.

APPENDIX ON 'JEHOVAH SABÁOTH.'

THIS remarkable but obscure phrase, expressive of the almightiness of God and His distinctness from nature, occurs forty-nine times in the acknowledged prophecies of Isaiah, and only thirteen times (including xxi. 10) in those of questioned authorship.

1. As to its meaning.—(a). The theory which has met with the widest acceptance till recently, is that of Ewald,<sup>1</sup> who regards the 'hosts' as primarily the angels. According to him, the phrase arose on the occasion of some great victory, when it seemed as if the armies of Jehovah had come down to the relief of His people. He finds an allusion to this origin in Isa. xxxi. 4, and even, which seems more venturesome, in Judges v. 20. The rise of the name is traced to the close of the period of the Judges (it occurs first in 1 Sam. i. 3, 11), on the ground of its evident popularity in the time of David ; Ewald refers especially to Ps. xxiv. 7–10 (the only Psalm-passage in which the phrase occurs outside the Korahite psalms), which he regards as occasioned by the solemn entrance of the ark into the city of David. He admits, however (referring to Isa. xl. 26) that the phrase was in later times probably explained of the stars. The usus loquendi is to some extent undoubtedly in favour of this view. The angels are called 'Jehovah's hosts' in Ps. ciii. 21, cxlviii. 2 (see below), 'the host of heaven' in 1 Kings xxii. 19, Neh. ix. 6, and (a certain number of them) 'a camp of Elohim,' Gen. xxxii. 2 ; and in Isa. vi. 3 there may be an allusion to this meaning of 'Jehovah Sabáoth.' There is no doubt a large element of truth in this view of Ewald's.

(b) Herder and Schrader<sup>2</sup> think the 'hosts' were originally the armies of Israel, of whom Jehovah is represented as being the leader, Ex. vii. 4, xii. 41, 51 ; comp. Josh. v. 14. The explanation in a speech of David, 1 Sam. xvii. 45, is favourable to this view, as also is the fact that צבאות everywhere else means 'earthly armies.' 'Lord of Armies' will then be the best translation; so already Aquila, Symm., Theod., Vulg. Herder grants, however, that the meaning gradually expanded till it included first the stars, and then the whole fulness of the Divine glory in creation (comp. use of צבא in Gen. ii. 1). Schrader further remarks, that the celestial hosts of Jehovah are constantly expressed by צבא (sing.); in two places only, Ps. ciii. 21, cxlviii. 2, we find צבאיו and צבאיו; but these readings, Schrader thinks, are due to a pedantic grammatical objection, the authors of the points having taken offence at the incongruity of a singular noun with a plural verb. In both places we should read צבאי, which indeed is the K'rî reading in Ps. cxlviii. 2. To this remark Delitzsch replies, Why should not צבא have two plurals, just as צבי has both צבאים and צבאות? The received reading in the Psalms should stand. I cannot, any more than Delitzsch, accept Schrader's explanation as adequate, even admitting his view of the meaning of 'צ'. It is clear to me from Isa. xiii. 4 that the prophets sometimes interpreted the word with reference to non-Israelitish armies, when those were under commission, so to speak, from Jehovah. But even thus we have not expanded the meaning sufficiently.

(c) The original meaning of 'Sabáoth,' as critics are more and more coming to see, is probably the stars. So Kuenen, Tiele, Baudissin, and even Delitzsch.<sup>1</sup> Whence comes it, asks the latter, that the title Jehovah Sabáoth comes specially before us in the regal period? There were armies of Israel before this; must there not be some connection with the astrolatry of the neighbouring nations (especially the Aramæans) with whom the Israelites then came into contact? The stars, too, are constantly referred to as 'the host of heaven' (Deut. iv. 19, xvii. 3, 2 Kings xvii. 16, xxi. 3, 5, xxiii. 4, 5, Isa. xxxiv. 4, Jer. viii. 2, xix. 13, xxxiii. 22, Zeph. i. 5, Dan. viii. 10, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3, 5); in Job xxv. 3 (comp. 5) as Jehovah's 'bands'; and in Isa. xl. 26 as the 'host' which He musters. Considering that the roots of Mosaism lay in a popular, primitive Semitic religion (though its life-giving spirit came from another source); or, in other words, that the prophets did not introduce an entirely new phraseology corresponding to their new ideas, it seems most probable that when the stars were first called the hosts of God it was with the notion that they were animated creatures. In later times the belief in the angels threw the belief in the stars as animated beings into the background; the angels, however, were evidently connected very closely with the stars, as appears from Job xxv. 5 (comp. iv. 18), and especially xxxviii. 7. Comp. also Judges v. 20, Dan. viii. 10, 11, and the symbolic language of Luke x. 18, Rev. xii. 7; notice too the place of the stars between vegetables and animals in Gen. i. 16. Our own Marlowe has a phrase pointing to a similar idea:

(The moon, the planets, and the meteors light,)
 These angels in their crystal armour fight
 A doubtful battle, &c.—(Tamburlaine, Act V., Sc. 2),

and Wordsworth, in his sonnet on the stars, indulges in the same fanciful supposition.—It is only of the original meaning of the phrase that I am now speaking. In later times different writers may have used it in other senses, some thinking of the angels, others of the armies of Israel, others in all senses combined; hence LXX.'s παροκράτωρ, in 2 Sam., 1 Chron., Minor Prophets, and eight times in Jeremiah (according to Gesenius). For the latter use, comp. the parallel phrase about Nebo quoted below.

ii. Parallel religious phrases.—The Assyrian and Babylonian parallels are not verbally so close as might be supposed from the translations sometimes given, as kissatu, plur. kissati, is not exactly a 'legion' (Oppert, Lenormant) in a military sense, but 'a multitude, or mass of men' (Aram. knash, collegit). Still they agree in ascribing to the supreme gods the lordship over the celestial as well as the earthly populations. Assur, for instance, is called 'the king of the multitudes of the great gods' (Obelisk of Nimrud, line i.); Nebo, 'the king of the multitudes of heaven and earth' ('Annals of Sargon,' Records of Past, vii. 46, amending the translation); while to Marduk, the other great Babylonian deity, is ascribed the empire of 'the spirits of the multitudes of heaven and earth.'<sup>1</sup> The phrase 'spirits of heaven' will include the three hundred spirits, who, though not gods properly so called, were supernatural beings, and were closely attached to the stars (a similar theory to that noticed above).<sup>2</sup> On the parallel Persian belief in the Fravashis, see Spiegel, Eranische Alterthümer, ii. 94.

iii. Construction. There are three views, (a) that of Gesenius: 'צ is in the direct relation of a genitive to ה, comp. Aram-Naharaim, 'Aram of the two rivers,' and in Arabic 'Antar of the horsemen'; (b) that of Ewald: There is an ellipsis of אלהי; thus 'Jehovah (the God of) Hosts' (this is confirmed by the occurrence of יהוה צ and יהוה אלהי צ in the same book—Jeremiah); (c) 'צ has become a proper name, as it was evidently taken by the author or corrector of Ps. lxxx. 8, 15 אלהים צ, by the translators of parts of the Sept. version (κύριος Σαβαώθ constantly in Isaiah), by St. Jerome once (Jer. xi. 20, Vulg.), and Luther constantly, and as in the Sibylline Oracles, and sometimes in (Christian) Ethiopic. Comp. also Rom. ix. 29 (quotation from Isa. i. 9), James v. 4. 'It is at least a noteworthy coincidence,' remarks Dr. Plumptre, 'that it is through the liturgy which is ascribed to [St. James], that it has passed into the devotional language of Christendom' (Biblical Studies, p. 15). An incidental confirmation of the view of which we are speaking is furnished by Valerius Maximus, who, being a mere compiler, doubtless took his statement from a much older authority. He relates that a prætor expelled certain Jews from Rome, 'qui Sabazii Jovis cultu Romanos inficere mores conati erant' (i. 3, 3). It is difficult to avoid seeing here a confusion of the Phrygian deity Sabazius with the Sabáoth of the Jews. If we are puzzled to account for Sabáoth as a proper name, Luzzatto is at hand with an answer (note on Isa. i. 9); he accounts for it in the same way as for the use of Elohim for the true God, the separate objects of heathen worship, so far as they had a real existence, being concentrated in Jehovah. The combination of two proper names is paralleled in the Corpus Inscr. Semit. (i. 33) by the Astar-Kemosh of the Moabite Stone (l. 17), though the parallel is incomplete, as there is no evidence that Sabáoth was ever used without another name for God being prefixed. At the very least, Sabáoth is in process of becoming a proper name, and there is good ancient authority for the rendering here adopted, Jehovah Sabáoth.

CHAPTER II.

THERE is clearly no connection between chaps. i. and ii., whereas ii.-iv. form a continuous prophecy. There is a difference between Ewald and Delitzsch as to whether chap. v. ought to be regarded as part of the same work as chaps. ii.-iv. The moral and social state described agrees with that in the foregoing chapters, but the prediction of the judgment differs by introducing human instruments, viz. the Assyrians. Ewald's conclusion, that 'these pieces belong to one great oration' (Prophets, ii. 18), seems to me correct, provided it be clearly understood that chaps. ii.-iv. represent, at any rate in part, earlier discourses than chap. v. I have given a full analysis in I. C. A. pp. 3, 4. Suffice it to say here, that the burden of the prophecy is the necessity of a grand vindication of God's holiness, which will lead to a realisation of Israel's destiny such as is at present impossible.

As to the date of these four chapters. Two points referred to by the prophet are of importance, (1) the taste for foreign fashions, particularly in religion; and (2) the weak character of the king. Both suggest the reign of Ahaz, who was specially fickle in religion (2 Kings xvi. 2-4, 10), whereas Uzziah and Jotham were strict worshippers of Jehovah, and who, according to vii. 1-12, was both timid and a prey to ignoble superstitions. But what part of the reign of Ahaz? From ii. 16 ('ships of Tarshish') it appears that Elath was still in the possession of Judah. Now this port was lost by Ahaz during the period of the Syro-Israelitish invasion. Hence the prophecies summed up in chaps. ii.-iv., or ii.-v., must be placed either very early indeed in the reign of Ahaz, or else the prophecies of two successive periods (Jotham and Ahaz) have been fused together. See also on ix. 8-x. 4.

<sup>1</sup> The heading evidently belongs to chaps. ii.-iv., or ii.-v., which are thought to have formed a separate collection of prophecies. — The word i.e., the revelation (so Jer. xviii. 18). There cannot be any special reference to the actual words of the prophecy, for it is added, 'which Isaiah saw' (see on i. 1).

few variations and one additional verse in Mic. iv. 1-4. The variations have a more rugged look, and therefore are perhaps closer to the original text, and certainly the verses fit in better there with the context than in Isaiah. Micah therefore can hardly have borrowed it from Isaiah. Neither can Isaiah have borrowed it from Micah, for the prophecy to which it is attached after-days that the mountain of Jehovah's house shall become

(see Mic. iii.) was delivered in the time of Hezekiah (Jer. xxvi. 18). The force of this argument has been doubted by Del., who observes that Micah may have composed the prophecy long before he published it in Hezekiah's reign, and that Isaiah may have taken the passage from Micah's lips, though not from his book. (Similarly Caspari, Micah, p. 447; but see, on the other side, Kuenen, Onderzoek, ii. 348.)—It is a minute and delicate question. My impression is that Mic. iv. 1-4 is not in the tone of Micah, and that v. 5 is a skilful attempt of that prophet to work a fragment of an older prophecy into his own work:—Isa. ii. 5 has no doubt a similar object. Both Isaiah and Micah were charged with messages of a predominantly gloomy character. Their hearers, however, were familiar with an old and truly Divine word of promise, which seemed to some inconsistent with the terrible judgment which later prophets so earnestly announced. Isaiah and Micah, prophets of a kindred spirit, have both quoted this prophecy with the view of showing its essential agreement with their own graver revelation. Similar quotations from older works occur (probably) in Isa. xv., xvi., Jer. xlix. 7-22.—It is significant that Isaiah leaves out one verse of the fragment which Micah preserves. Such an idyllic picture was out of harmony with the awful prospect before Isaiah (Duhm).

<sup>2</sup> And it shall come to pass] These words nowhere else occur at the beginning of a prophecy.—In the after-days] Literally, in the sequel of the days. A much-debated phrase, which occurs here only in Isaiah, but four times in the Book of Jeremiah (xxiii. 20, xxx. 24, xlviii. 47, xlii. 39), once in Hosea (iii. 5), once in Micah (iv. 1 = Isa. ii. 2), once in Ezekiel (xxviii. 16), once in Daniel (x. 14), and four times in the Pentateuch

(Gen. xlix. 1, Num. xxi. 14, Deut. iv. 30, xxxi. 29); in Exod. xxxviii. 8, we have the parallel phrase 'in the sequel of the years.' The rendering adopted above is based on philological grounds. 'After,' in the term 'after-days,' corresponds to a Hebrew word (akh'rith), meaning—not 'end,' but—'latter part' or 'sequel,' as Bildad says in the Book of Job, 'Thy early time was a trifle, but thy latter time (thy future) shall be very great' (viii. 7). Precisely the same phrase occurs in Assyrian, and its meaning is certain from the context (ana akh'rat yumi irib, 'for a future time I deposited.') In the Old Test. the phrase 'in the sequel of the days,' or 'in the after-days,' occurs only in prophecies—mostly (not always, as Kimchi asserts), referring to the glorious Messianic period which should ensue upon the 'day' or assize 'of Jehovah,' and so here, but sometimes used quite vaguely of future time, e.g. Jer. xxiii. 20, 'The anger of Jehovah shall not turn back, till he have executed, and till he have carried into effect the purposes of his heart: in future days ye shall duly consider it' (Henderson's translation); also Deut. iv. 30, xxxi. 29, where a reference to the Messianic period is excluded by the context. The rendering of A.V. 'the last days' is misleading, for the Messianic period (described in the following verses) has no 'last days'; it is without an end (ix. 7). A similar mistake occurs in the A.V. of 1 Tim. iv. 1, where ἐν ὑστέροις καιροῖς 'in later times' (Revised Version), is rendered 'in the latter times.'—The mountain of Jehovah's house. . . . ] An implied contrast to Sinai, whence the earlier and more limited revelation proceeded. Mount Zion, where Jehovah's merciful presence constantly abides, is to be the centre of religious unity to the world. So much is intelligible enough, but the physical phenofixed at the head of the mountains, and be exalted above the hills, and all the nations shall stream unto it. <sup>3</sup> And many peoples shall set forth and shall say, "Come, let us go up to the mountain of Jehovah, to the house of the God of Jacob, and let him teach us out of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." For from Zion shall go forth the instruction, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem. <sup>4</sup> And he shall judge between the nations, and arbitrate for many peoples : and they shall beat their swords into coulters, and their spears into pruning-knives, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.'

menon connected with this statement seems paradoxical ; and Vitringa asks, ' Quid sibi velit, et quod sub cortice lateat mysterium?' But the prophet means just what he says. It is for the spirit of revelation at each successive stage of prophecy to strip off the worn-out form received from the past, until the fulfilment shows the depth of spiritual meaning underneath the letter. It was an old belief in Eastern Asia that there was a mountain reaching from earth to heaven, on the summit of which was the dwelling of the gods (see on xiv. 13). The prophet is, perhaps, alluding to this belief, which he recognises as true in substance, though attached by the heathen to a wrong locality. At any rate, mount Zion is to be physically raised, and to become fixed at the head of the lower mountains, which radiate, as it were, in all directions from it. A similar physical change is anticipated for Jerusalem in Zech. xiv. 10, and for the Valley of Jehoshaphat, in connection with the 'day of Jehovah,' in Joel iii. 12. Ezekiel, too, speaks of having been transported in an ecstatic state to 'a very high mountain' (xl. 2), evidently alluding to this passage. The view adopted has the further method of explaining a similar phrase in xi. 9 (see note). The alternative rendering, 'on the top of the (piled up) mountains' (Vitr., Ew., Luz., Caspari), requires to be taken in a figurative sense, and so introduces an inconsistency into the description. — And all the nations . . . ] This great mountain shall become their rallying-point, like the banner in xi. 10. Parallel passages, Isa. lx. 3, Jer. iii. 17, Zech. ii. 11, viii. 22, 23.

<sup>3</sup> Shall say, Come . . . ] Similarly Zech. viii. 20, 21. — Let him teach us ] viz. by his prophets (called 'teachers,' xxx. 20). The revelation of the 'prophet-people,' Israel, was reserved for II Isaiah. — Out of his ways ] God's ways here are not His dealings with man (as lv. 8), but the rules of moral and religious conduct. So ἡ ὁδός is used in the New Test. for Christianity viewed on its practical side, and sabil 'way' in the Korān. These rules are described as a store out of which the divine teacher draws his instruction (comp. Ps. xciv. 12 Del.). — Shall go forth the instruction ] i.e., the revelation of divine truth shall be like a perennial stream.

<sup>4</sup> Thus Israelites and non-Israelites shall be united in one great spiritual empire under Jehovah. No satraps nor Tartans are necessary, for the nations have the full rights of citizenship (Ps. lxxxvii.), and the only precedence of Israel is that coveted by Milton for England, of 'teaching the nations how to live.' — They shall beat their swords . . . ] The same image reversed Joel iii. (iv.) 10. Comp. also ix. 5 (4), Hos. ii.

18, Zech. ix. 10, 'the battle-bow shall be cut off; and he shall speak peace unto the nations.'

<sup>5</sup> But alas! the ideal time described by the prophet is still very far off. Israel himself must first be brought into the right way. Therefore, in accents of an appealing tenderness rare with Isaiah, he exclaims, O house of Jacob! come, let us walk (comp. 'Come, let us go up, v. 3), in the light of Jehovah, i.e. in the light of Jehovah's revelation. 'Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path' (Ps. cxix. 105).

<sup>6</sup> The connection is a little difficult to trace, and it is very possible that the text is in some disorder. As the text stands, we had best explain it thus. The invitation in v. 5 implies that the people were at present not 'walking in the light of Jehovah'; in fact, that they had more or less completely forsaken Jehovah.<sup>1</sup> But instead of continuing, 'For thou hast forsaken thy God, O house of Jacob,' the prophet expresses the corresponding fact from the point of view of revelation: For thou (O Jehovah!) hast cast off thy people, and then the cause of this change in the Divine revelation, because they are replenished from the East. ('House of Jacob!' in v. 6 a is repeated to link this section with the last.) The East here undoubtedly means Aram (i.e., Syria and Mesopotamia), which in ix. 12 (comp. xi. 14) is antithetically parallel to Philistia, and in Num. xxiii. 7, parallel synonymously to 'the mountains of the East.' All forms of culture, especially religious, are covered by Isaiah's phrase. The prevalence of magic in Syria is shown by the narrative of Balaam (Num. xxii.-xxiv.), and the Aramaic affinities of three of the special names for sorcerers in iii. 2, 3 confirm the accuracy of the prophet's statement. Babylonia, however, not Syria, was the earliest home of magic. The very next phrase, diviners of the clouds, reminds us that the clouds, both of the day and of the night, were studied by the Chaldean diviners.<sup>2</sup> Another possible rendering is cloud-makers (Del.), which reminds us of the common name of sorcerers in savage tribes, 'rain-makers.'—Like the Philistines [With whom the victories of Uzziah and Jotham had brought them into contact. They had a recognised order of diviners (1 Sam. vi. 2), and a famous oracle at Ekron (2 Kings i. 2).—Make contracts with . . . ] Alluding probably (if the rendering be correct) to the commercial activity of the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham (2 Kings xiv. 22, xvi. 6). The prophets were opposed to this, because it opened the door to influences unfavourable to a pure religion. See xxiii. 17, Zeph. i. 8.

<sup>7</sup> Is become full of silver and gold . . . ] Comp. the account of Hezekiah's tribute to Sennacherib on the Taylor cylinder:—'30 talents of gold, 800 talents of silver, cast metal (?), . . . large precious stones,' &c., (Schrader, K. A. T. p. 293.

of silver and gold, and without end are his treasures ; <sup>a</sup> and his land is become full of horses, and without end are his chariots ; <sup>a</sup> and his land is become full of not-gods ; to the work of their hands they do homage, to that which their fingers have made. <sup>10 b</sup> Therefore must the earth-born be bowed down, and the man be brought low, <sup>b</sup> and thou canst not forgive them. Go into the rock, and hide thee in the

<sup>a</sup> Horses . . . chariots] The chariots were not merely for use in war, but for state ; comp. 2 Sam. xv. 1 ; 2 Kings v. 9, 15 ; Eccles. x. 7 (Hitz.). Horses were first imported from Egypt by the worldly-wise Solomon (1 Kings iv. 26, x. 28, 29) ; and Ahab seems to have cared more for them than for his suffering people (1 Kings xviii. 5). The prohibition in Deut. xvii. 16 was therefore not uncalled for, and it was no idle feature in the description of the Messianic King, that he was to ride upon an ass (Zech. ix. 9). The statement about the chariots must be taken with the qualifications required by xxx. 1, xxxvi. 8. Ritter thinks that chariots were mostly used in Ephraim, and horses without chariots in Judah (as being more hilly) ; comp. Zech. ix. 10.

<sup>b</sup> Not-gods] i.e., idols, possibly including symbols of Jehovah. Similar complaints are made by Isaiah's contemporaries, Amos (ii. 4), Hosea (xi. 12), and Micah (i. 5, v. 13). The uniqueness of the divinity of Jehovah, and the inadequacy of any symbol, were their special revelation. Isaiah seems to have chosen or coined a special word (ellim) for the dethroned idol-gods ; as if he would say, 'They are not ellim 'strong ones' — gods, but ellim 'nonentities.'

<sup>10</sup> Therefore must . . .] By a necessity of God's moral law (this is implied in the Hebrew, comp. Ps. cix. 16–18), such open infidelity must be chastised. Whether the chastisement is past, present, or future is not expressed in the words

themselves ; it is the context which proves it to be future (comp. v. 15). Many of the older expositors, however, and among the moderns Ewald, take the 'bowing down' and the 'bringing low' to refer to the idolaters of the preceding verse ('Thus the earth-born abaseth himself, and the man boweth low'), the transition to the judgment being formed by the second half of the verse ('And forgive them not'). The objection is (1) that the idolatrous worship has been sufficiently treated in v. 9, and (2) that there is no evidence that v. 9 <sup>b</sup> marks a transition—in order to do so, it should run 'And thou —forgive them not' (Naeg.).—The earth-born] There is probably an allusion to a popular etymology for ādām 'man' (comp. Ps. cxvi. 3, 4), as a Latin writer might take homo from humus.—And thou canst not forgive them.] Lit., and forgive them not. Why? Because theirs is a 'sin unto death' (comp. xxii. 14). 'Forgive me my foul murder? That cannot be' (Hamlet, act iii. sc. 3).

A brief pause must be supposed here, after which the divine Judge is seen approaching, accompanied by the earthquake and the storm (v. 25 ; comp. Mic. i. 4, Hab. iii.) Obs. nothing is said as yet of the Assyrians.—Go into the rock] Similarly Hosea x. 8, Rev. vi. 16. <sup>12</sup> For a day hath . . .] 'A day' for displaying his power in wrath and in mercy (see on xiii. 6), hence followed by 'upon.' 'Hath it,' viz. in readiness—every day has a kind of pre-existence in the super-sensible world (Job iii. 1-10). It is the world's judgment-day which is here referred to, one act of which is the judgment upon Jerusalem, see on chap. xxiv. The same form of phrase in xxii. 5, xxxiv. 8.—Proud and lofty] The ideas of eminence, pride, and opposition to Jehovah melt into each other in the Old Test.; comp. Job xl. 11, 12, Gen. iii. 22.

<sup>13</sup> Upon all cedars of Lebanon . . .] It has been asked whether the various items of the following description are to be taken literally or figuratively. They must be all taken in the same way; there is nothing to indicate a distinction (made by Calvin and Hitzig) between vv. 13, 14, and the rest of the passage. The mention of artificial as well as natural objects pleads strongly in favour of a literal interpretation; only we must not suppose the judgment of Jehovah to be confined to the objects here specified. We have before us nothing less than the germ of the prophecy of the 'regeneration' of nature (Matt. xix. 28), which, though probably affected in some of its Jewish and Judæo-Christian expressions by the analogous Persian belief, is in idea an essential part of the old prophetic teaching. Actual nature has become too closely wedded to man's sinful pride to be suitable for the regenerate people of the glorified theocracy. The forests of Lebanon and Bashan tempted Solomon and Uzziah to build those palaces and towers which corrupted the simplicity of Israelitish faith. They are therefore to be taken as representatives of the condemned features of the existing order of things, just as towers are taken in xxx. 23.

<sup>14</sup> Mountains . . . hills] Comp. Korân, Sur. xx. 105-6 (Rodwell), 'and they will ask thee of the mountains: Say: scattering my Lord will scatter them in dust; And he will leave them a level plain: thou shalt see in it no hollows or jutting hills.' Mohammed is speaking of the Day of Resurrection.

<sup>15</sup> High tower] Referring to the buildings of Uzziah and Jotham, 2 Chron. xxvi. 9, 10, xxvii. 3, 4. Comp. Hosea viii. 14, Mic. v. 11.

<sup>16</sup> Ships of Tarshish] Deep sea ships, such as were built for the foreign trade, especially with Tartessus and Ophir (1 Kings xxii. 48). At this time, then, the Jews still possessed a fleet, the station of which was at Elath, on the Red Sea. In the reign of Ahaz the Arameans 'recovered Elath for not 'high places' but 'sin,' see Q. P. B.; 'high places' is a gloss from Hosea x. 8.—Which were made viz. for a very different purpose. Lit. 'which they made,' viz. the manufacturers of idols.

<sup>19</sup> To shock the earth A thoroughly Isaianic paronomasia—'ut terreat terram.' So in Ps. x. 18.

<sup>22</sup> In whose nostrils is a breath 'Jehovah Elohim . . . breathed into his nostrils breath of life' (Gen. ii. 7). This verse connects very badly with what precedes. 'Cease ye from idols' would be a much more natural exhortation. The style, too, is very inferior. Omit the verse, and the effect of the sequel is enhanced. We then have a striking transition from the general description of the effects of the day of Jehovah to the special details connected with Jerusalem: the captivity of Jerusalem becomes the earnest of the overthrow of all 'proud and lofty' things. The tone of v. 22 reminds us of the post-exile period. Comp. Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4 (in a Psalm of Haggai and Zechariah, according to Sept.).

CHAPTER III.

HAVING established the certainty of a judgment, the prophet goes on to describe it in detail. Probably we have here a summary of a fresh series of discourses. At v. 16 it is probable that the summary becomes a little fragmentary, for the introductory formula is elsewhere confined to cases in which Jehovah in person is the speaker. This is not the case here. The unusually lax application of the formula suggests that here, as in chap. ii., a later editor has been at work, and that the formula is merely inserted to bridge over a lacuna in the notes. Still the position of iii. 16-24 is not at all unsuitable. There are clearly points of contact in it with what precedes. Haughtiness and luxury are rebuked in chap. ii., and the prominence given to the women is in harmony with the feminine form of the word 'staff' (see on v. 1), and with the statement respecting the women in v. 12.—At v. 25 there is an abrupt transition from the fate of the women to that of Zion as a whole.

<sup>1</sup> For behold, the Lord . . . ] Notice the solemnity of the introduction. Comp. i. 24, x. 16, 33, xix. 4.—~~Removeth~~ . . . ] i.e., mediately, through war and captivity.—~~Stay and staff~~ ] i.e., all those classes and orders mentioned in vv. 2, 3, on which the outward and inward life of the community depends (ch. xix. 10; 'the pillars' = the nobles). 'Staff' in the Heb. is the feminine form of 'stay' (cf. Mic. ii. 4, Nah. ii. 11, Del.). Observe the importance still enjoyed by women among the Israelites, though less now than in the 'patriarchal' period.—~~Every stay of bread~~ . . . ] It would be strange if the prophet used the same phrases in parallel members of the verse in totally different senses. If the classes referred to in vv. 2, 3 were merely those of bread-winners, the productive classes as we call them, the second interpretation might perhaps pass. But with the exception probably of the last but one, it is not bread-winning but valour and wisdom which characterise these classes. It is probably one of those marginal glosses which the scribes and editors of the prophecies inserted during or after the exile (see any critical edition of Jeremiah). Inattentive to the context, a scribe interpreted 'stay and staff' by the light of the phrases, 'staff of bread' (Ps. cv. 16, Ezek. iv. 16, v. 16, Lev. xxvi. 26), and 'to stay the heart with bread' (Gen. xviii. 5, Ps. civ. 15).

<sup>2</sup> First in order among the props of the state came the warriors. The prophet puts himself at the popular or unbelieving point of view. Then comes a medley of different offices. Obs., in the mention of the elder, how the idea of the family still governs the social organisation. The 'elders' were originally heads of families, and have their analogue in the council of the Aryan village communities (comp. Sir H. Maine). References to their parliamentary status (if the phrase may be used) occur in Ex. iii. 16, 2 Sam. xiv. 11, 1 Kings viii. 1, xx. 7. The institution lingered on during and after the Babylonian exile, Jer. xxix. 1, Ezek. xiv. 1, xx. 1, Ezra v. 5, vi. 7, x. 14; Matt. xxvi. 3, 47, Mark xiv. 43, Acts iv. 5, &c. In v. 14 and prophet, and soothsayer and elder; <sup>3</sup> the captain of fifty and the man of repute, and the counsellor and the skilful <sup>b</sup> artificer, and the expert enchanter. <sup>4</sup> And I will make youths to be their princes, and with wilfulness shall they rule over them. <sup>5</sup> And the people shall oppress one another, man against man, and neighbour against neighbour; they shall behave boisterously, the child towards the old man, and the mean man towards the honourable. <sup>6</sup> When a man shall take hold of his brother in his father's house, 'Thou hast clothing, thou shalt be our judge, and let this ruin be under thy hand:'

(see note) they are referred to as 'princes' or 'principal men'; they are also included under the term 'counsellor' in v. 2.—Prophet and soothsayer are classed together, like 'mighty man and man of war'; they are nearly the same in meaning, at any rate from the point of view which the prophet here assumes. So Jer. xxix. 8; cf. Mic. iii. 11, Ezek. xxii. 28. It does not appear that the prophets denied the reality of magical powers, though they did assert that the use of them without the direction and assistance of Jehovah was an act of rebellion against the God of gods (see further on vii. 11). Nor does Isaiah appear to have denied the prophetic character to those who held lower views of the Divine nature. He classes the degenerate prophets with the degenerate priests, and upbraids the former because, when they might have prophesied 'right things,' they uttered 'deceits' (xxx. 10). Jeremiah, however, has had it revealed to him that there are false prophets (xxiii. 25–32), though the invention of the phrase 'false prophet,' is due to the Sept. (e.g. xxxiii. 1–16 Sept.).

<sup>3</sup> Captain of fifty] The leader of the smallest division of the army (2 Kings i. 9), but also apparently a civil officer (comp. Ex. xviii. 21, 25), just as in Jer. xxvi. 21 the gibbōrim or 'mighty men' are treated as men of weight in civil affairs. The fifty was a technical term, analogous to our 'hundreds' and

'tythings.' See Church Quarterly Review (July 1880, p. 429).—Skilful artificer] Artisans are particularly mentioned as sharing the captivity of Jehoiachin, 2 Kings xxiv. 14, Jer. xxiv. 1. Alt. rendering is no doubt plausible. (Ps. lviii. 6, Hebr.) Magic practices were highly developed in the Semitic East, and even as it would seem in Jerusalem. Still, we have already two designations of soothsayers, and we can hardly spare the artificers, on whom so much depended in times of war (for machines) as well as of peace.

<sup>4–5</sup> Thus deprived of its ἀπιοτοι, Judah will become a prey to an anarchy such as had already befallen Israel.—Youths their princes] Only youths would desire such a miserable kingdom; and their childish capriciousness would contribute to the general misery. A specimen of the latter was given by Ahaz (see on v. 12), and after him by Manasseh (king at 12).

<sup>6</sup> The distress shall be so great that any one who is still possessed of a respectable outer garment shall be importuned to accept the government, and shall protest against the dubious honour.—In his father's house] Where brothers would naturally meet, opposed to 'my house' afterwards.—A binder-up] One to hold together the fragments of the state; comp. xxx. 26, 'bindeth up the breach of his people'; or, a binder-up of wounds, a surgeon.

<sup>7</sup> he shall lift up (his voice) on that day, saying, 'I will not be a binder-up, for in my house is neither bread nor clothing; ye shall not appoint me to be a judge of the people.'

<sup>8</sup> For Jerusalem is sunk into ruin, and Judah is fallen, because their tongue and their deeds have been against Jehovah, to defy the eyes of his glory. <sup>9</sup> Observation of their face witnesseth against them, and their sin they have declared like Sodom, undisguisedly: alas for themselves, for they have achieved for themselves misfortune. <sup>10</sup> (<sup>d</sup> Happy is the righteous! for <sup>d</sup> it is well, for the fruit of their deeds they shall eat.

<sup>11</sup> Alas for the wicked! Ill! for the achievement of his hands shall be given him.) <sup>12</sup> My people—his governor is a wilful child, and women rule over him: my people—thy guides are misleading, and the way of thy paths they have swallowed up.

<sup>10, 11</sup> These verses rather interrupt the connection, but supply a beautiful example of parallelism. They assert the doctrine of 'future rewards and punishments' in a spiritual and not a mechanical sense. Good deeds ripen into

<sup>12</sup> His governor is a wilful child] Isaiah means a child in character rather than in age, for Ahaz was probably twenty-five (i.e., five years older than Solomon, Ewald, iii. 208; comp. iv. 167) when he came to the throne. His timidity was shown in the Syro-Israelitish invasion (vii. 2, 2 Kings xvi. 5, 7); his effeminacy appears from the next clause of this verse, and his hankering for novelties from 2 Kings xvi. 10.—Thy guides . . .] Lit. 'thy righteners,' those who should lead thee in the right way, a duty commended to the ruling class in i. 23. A delicate irony! So ix. 16.—Swallowed up] i.e., effaced. Similarly xxv. 7, 8.

<sup>13</sup> No effect has been produced by the friendly pleadings of the prophet. Now the scene changes. Jehovah standeth to plead judicially. The same phrase is used in the same sense in Ps. lxxxii. 1, though critics doubt whether the objects of the judgment are human or superhuman beings. Elsewhere we read that Jehovah 'sitteth' (i.e., on his heavenly throne) to judge (Joel iii. 12, Ps. ix. 4). Here the figure peoples. <sup>14</sup> Jehovah will enter into judgment with the elders of his people, and its princes: 'So then ye have eaten up the vineyards, the plunder of the afflicted is in your houses. <sup>15</sup> What mean ye that ye crush my people, and grind the face of the afflicted?' Oracle of the Lord, Jehovah Sabáoth.

is different. Jehovah stands in a menacing attitude ready to hurl his bolt; whether in heaven or on earth (comp. Mic. i. 2) the prophet does not say.—The peoples] Jehovah has revealed himself as the God, and consequently as the Judge, of all the nations of the world. But Isaiah merely hints at this, and devotes himself rather to the case of Jerusalem, which has such grievous need of purification, before the 'many nations' can go up thither for spiritual teaching. We might express the relation between vv. 13, 14 thus: 'Jehovah, when setting himself to judge the world, shall first enter into the case of the princes of his chosen people Israel' (Roorda). Comp. Ps. ix. 7, 8.

<sup>14</sup> Elders . . . princes] See on v. 2. From Ex. xviii. 13-26 it appears that the 'elders' originally performed judicial functions.—So then ye . . .] The prophet skips over the examination of the witnesses, and gives only the latter part of the summing up of the judge. 'Ye' is emphatic. Ye, from whom such different conduct was to be expected, have 'eaten up the vineyard' (see v. 7). 'He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye,' is Jehovah's word elsewhere (Zech. ii. 8).

<sup>15</sup> Grind the face] Isaiah uses the strongest of metaphors to describe the cruel injustice of which the poor were the subjects. Its opposite is 'to smooth the face,' i.e. to entreat the favour (Ps. xlv. 12 A. V.). A similar metaphorical passage in Mic. iii. 2, 3.

<sup>16</sup> And Jehovah said] Here a new discourse begins, which these words loosely connect with the foregoing prophecy (see Introd.).

It concerns the ladies of Jerusalem (comp. xxxii. 9-12), whose love of dress, expressing their inward pride, is threatened with condign punishment. Twenty-one articles are mentioned (some of which are still very general among Syrian ladies), and the difficulty of explaining all the names from the Hebrew shows that this toilette-luxury was not of native origin; comp. Zeph. i. 8: 'all such as are clothed with foreign clothing.' To judge from the names we should suspect Syrian and Arabian influences, though it must be admitted that modern Arabic names of clothing do not at all correspond; nor has any light as yet been derived from the Assyrian. Quantity, it is evident, was as much sought after as quality, by the fashionable ladies of Jerusalem, Rings and chains, head-dresses and veils, upper and under garments, occur in a profusion which it is difficult to represent. All this was doubtless alien to primitive simplicity, though Judges v. 30 warns us that the defection from simplicity began long before Isaiah.—There is a somewhat parallel passage in the Korān (Sura xxiv. 31) beginning with the words, 'And speak to the believing women that they refrain their eyes, and observe continence,' and ending, 'And let them not strike their feet together,' &c. (referred to by Drechsler). Comp. also the tirade of Sacchetti, the Italian novelist, against the fashions of the Florentine women of the fourteenth century (he mentions inter alia, feet-chains), by which Longfellow illustrates the prophetic denunciation of Dante, Purgat. xxiii. 106-111.—The only monographs on the Israelitish toilette are still those of tripping along and tinkling with their feet: <sup>17</sup> therefore Jehovah will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and Jehovah will make bare their secret parts. <sup>18</sup> In that day Jehovah will take away the finery of the anklets, the <sup>4</sup> wreaths and the crescents; <sup>19</sup> the ear-drops and the arm-chains and the fine veils; <sup>20</sup> the diadems and the stepping-chains and the girdles; and the scent-bottles and the amulets; <sup>21</sup> the seal-rings and the nose-rings; <sup>22</sup> the state-dresses and the tunics, and the wrappers and the purses; <sup>23</sup> the <sup>e</sup> mirrors, and the linen shifts and the turbans and the Schröder and Hartmann, the one entitled Commentatio philologico-critica de vestitu mulierum Hebræarum (Lugd. Bat. 1745); the other, Die Hebräerin am Putztische und als Braut (3 vols. Amsterd. 1809). Part of the latter has been reproduced in a popular form by De Quincey (Works, vol. xi.).—Ewald thinks there is a method in the order of the catalogue; first the ornaments of the feet, then those of the head, then (vv. 22, 23) the larger dresses; but this requires some violence to carry it out.—Tripping . . . and tinkling] ‘The melodious chime of the silver ankle-bells, keeping time with the motions of the feet, made an accompaniment so agreeable to female vanity, that the stately daughters of Jerusalem, with their sweeping trains flowing after them, appear to have adopted a sort of measured tread, by way of impressing a regular cadence upon the music of their feet’ (De Quincey, xi. 123).

<sup>18</sup> The anklets] i.e., rings of silver or some other metal worn round the ankles; hence the verb rendered ‘tinkling’ in v. 16.—Wreaths] Explained in the Talmud of a wreath worn round the forehead, from one ear to the other (Buxtorf). LXX. τὰ ἐμσλόκια. Alt. rend. is also plausible, but involves comparison of the Arabic (‘wreath’ is from the Aramaic).—Crescents] Lit. little moons. These were hung upon the neck, Judg. viii. 21,

<sup>20</sup> Diadems] The words used for the tiaras of priests, Ex. xxxix. 28; of bridegrooms, lxi. 10.—Stepping-chains], connecting the anklets, and so enabling their wearers to go ‘tripping along’ v. 16.—Girdles] Costly girdles such as brides wore, Jer. ii. 32, comp. Isa. xlix. 18. Amulets] These were evidently in the form of ornaments. Probably ear-rings are meant here, such as those which Jacob took away and buried (Gen. xxxv. 4, Targ. q’dā-shāyyā, ‘holy things’). Similar amulets are still worn by Eastern women.

<sup>22</sup> State-dresses] Named in Hebr. from their being put off when the occasion for their use was over. In Zech. iii. 4 the word is used of the splendid high-priestly robes.—Tunics] i.e., the uppermost of the two under-dresses, richly embroidered, and bound with a superb girdle.—Wrappers] such as Ruth put on over her best clothes when she went to Boaz (Ruth iii. 15).

large veils. <sup>24</sup> And it shall come to pass : instead of perfume there shall be rottenness ; and instead of a girdle, a rope ; and instead of artificial curls, baldness, and instead of a mantle, a girding of sackcloth, a brand instead of beauty. <sup>25</sup> Thy people shall fall by the sword, and thy forces in war. <sup>26</sup> And her gates shall sigh and lament, and she shall be emptied, sitting upon the ground. IV. <sup>1</sup> And seven women shall take hold of one man in that day, saying, ' Our own bread will we eat, and our own clothing will we wear : only let us be called by thy name ; take away our disgrace.'

CHAPTER IV. 2 ETC.

2-6. A short section full of glorious promises. Why so short? Because the proper subject of the discourse to which this section belongs is not promise but threatening. The two passages which have a different scope (ii. 2-4, and iv. 2-6) are evidently inserted to relieve the dark tints of the picture. They describe the fair future of the purified Jerusalem, the one from without, the other chiefly from within.

Bottles and vases of that material have been found both at Nimrūd and at Khorsabad (Layard's Discoveries, 195-6), while in Egypt glass-blowing was known at least as early as the reign of the first Osirtasen (Wilkinson, iii. 88).—Large vells] Comp. Cant. v. 7.

IV. <sup>1</sup> Seven women . . .] 'A companion picture to iii. 6, where the surviving men lay hold on one who has bread and clothing to make him their kadi. The male population are in search of a ruler ; the women in search of a husband' (Dr. Weir).—Our disgrace] The disgrace of being childless (Gen.

xxx. 23), immortality being regarded as a family, not a personal, privilege.

<sup>2</sup> In that day] That is, after this destruction, says Alexander, with most of the commentators. This, however, is a superficial view. It will be observed that the phrase has been used five times since 'the day of Jehovah' was first mentioned in ii. 12, and in very different contexts. Hitherto it has pointed to some feature in the divine punishment of the sinners, but now it refers to the mercies of the saved. How can we account for this diversity of scope? Only on the theory, forced upon us by a wide examination of prophecy, that the contents of the prophetic revelations of the Messianic period are unconditioned by time (comp. 2 Pet. iii. 8). It is not a series of successive events and honour, and the fruitage of the land for a pride and which is unfolded before us, but rather processes which may in fact be going on simultaneously, though one may be more prominent at one time and another at another. The punishment of the sinners and the mercies of the saved are different aspects of one and the same eternal purpose of God.—

The growth of Jehovah . . . the fruitage of the land 'And Jehovah their God shall deliver them in that day as the flock of his people. . . . For how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! corn shall make the young men stalwart, and new wine the virgins;' Zech. ix. 16, 17. 'And I will raise up unto them a plantation as (a matter for) renown, and they shall no more be consumed with hunger in the land;' Ezek. xxxiv. 29. These two passages may serve to dissipate two objections which may be urged against the above rendering. First, it may be said, that a reference to the natural products of Canaan strikes a jarring note in the prophecy. But it equally seems to jar in Zechariah, and yet all interpreters admit the necessity of it. The truth is that a lengthened fertility of the soil is one of the most frequently recurring Messianic features—see, besides the above passages, Isa. xxx. 23, Am. ix. 13, Hos. ii. 21, 22, Joel iii. 18. It may be objected, secondly, that such a reference lacks any point of contact with the foregoing and the following prophecy (for few will agree with Ewald and Hofmann that there is a contrast suggested between the natural beauty of the divine gifts and the artificial luxuries of the Hebrew women). The answer is, that we have here only an imperfect summary of Isaiah's discourses. In all probability, v. 2 is merely a condensed abstract of a long section, and what that section contained may be guessed from the passage quoted from Ezekiel. The idea of it probably was that the supernatural fertility suddenly granted to the soil should prevent any evil consequences from the previous desolation of the land of Judah.

I have still to justify my explanation of these two expressions on phraseological grounds. 1. The two expressions in the Hebr. are clearly parallel; they may of course be either synonymous or antithetical; but considering that exactly the same quality is predicated of each of them, it is more natural to suppose them to be synonymous, or nearly so. 2. The fact that the context is entirely connected with the land of Judah shows that we must render the Hebr. ha-arec 'the land,' and not 'the earth.' Now the phrase, 'fruit of the land,' and the synonymous one 'fruit of the ground,' occur twelve times in the O. T., and always with reference to vegetation. 3. The Hebr. šemakh, though singular, is almost always used collectively. See especially lxi. 11 and Gen. xix. 25. The exceptions are Jer. xxiii. 5, xxxiii. 15 (though even here Graf and Kuenen take šemakh collectively); and Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12. It must be observed, however, that in Jer. the phrase is 'Plant (A. V. branch) of David.' This is clear, and therefore allowable; 'plant of Jehovah' is not clear—indeed, it would almost infallibly be misunderstood, with such a phrase as 'fruit of the land' in the parallel line. The only clear rendering is 'plantation (= plants) of Jehovah,' for which comp. Ps. civ. 16. 'The trees of Jehovah are satisfied (with rain); the cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted.' [Ew. and Del. both render 'Sprout of Jehovah,' but the former explains this collectively = 'products,' the latter personally of the Messiah. Del. fully admits that 'fruit of the land' must be taken as synonymous with this, and therefore explains 'fruit' as a personal designation, for which he comps. Ezek. xvii. 5: 'he took of the seed of the land (i.e., Zedekiah) and planted in a fruitful adornment unto the escaped of Israel. <sup>3</sup> And it shall come to pass : he who is left in Zion, and remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, everyone who is written down for life in Jerusalem, <sup>4</sup> when the Lord shall have washed off the filth of the daughters of Zion, and cleansed the blood of Jerusalem from her midst by a blast of judgment, and a blast of extermination. <sup>5</sup> And Jehovah shall create upon the whole site field.' But I would ask, Could Zedekiah have been called 'seed of the land' except in a detailed allegory? Calvin interprets literally as above, but thinks that the unwonted temporal blessings are types of spiritual ones, comp. xlv. 8. But there is nothing to indicate this in our passage. So too H. Schultz, Alttest. Theologie, ed. 1, ii. 244. Naeg's view is too farfetched to quote. Lagarde, Semitica, i. 8, takes the semakh to be 'a descendant of the Davidic house, whom in a dark age Yahwé will cause to be born, in antithesis to the natural descendants now become unprofitable,' and compares the Talmudic phrase 'field of Baal' = 'field nourished by rain.' But the opposite of this in the Talmud is —not 'fruit of the land'—but 'field of fountains,' i.e., irrigated land. See further in Last Words, vol. ii.]

<sup>3</sup> The character of the surviving citizens of Jerusalem shall be in harmony with their outward prosperity.—Shall be called] A name, according to the primitive belief, being a symbol of character, and almost a part of personality. In the Messianic period, this primitive belief will be uniformly verified by facts (xxxii. 5).—Holy] i.e., free from the contaminations of sin (see v. 4), with the collateral idea of inviolability, comp. vi. 13, Ps. xciii. 5.—Written down for life] Their survival, then, was no mere accident, but predestined. The belief in predestination, observes Ewald, was a 'powerful lever' of Hebrew prophecy (Glaubenslehre, ii. 208). For the 'book of Jehovah,' or 'the book of life,' comp. Ex. xxxii. 32, Ps. lvi. 8, lxix. 28, Mal.

iii. 16, Dan. xii. 1, Phil. iv. 3, Rev. xiii. 8, xxi. 27.

<sup>4</sup> When the Lord . . .] This is to be connected with v. 5; it supplies the conditions on which the fulfilment of the promise depends.—The filth] i.e., the moral defilement.—The bloodshed] refers chiefly to judicial murders (i. 15), but also perhaps to sacrifices of children to Moloch. 'And they shed innocent blood, the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan; and the land was polluted with blood' (Ps. cvi. 38; comp. Isa. lvii. 5, Ezek. xxii. 2, 3).—A blast of judgment] i.e., of punishment for the wicked. The same Hebrew phrase in xxviii. 6 means 'spirit of judgment.' The meaning 'blast,' however, is required here by the context, 'judgment' being synonymously parallel to 'extermination.' It is indeed still the Divine energy, but being exercised in the physical and not the moral sphere, the rendering 'spirit' is inappropriate. Comp. xxx. 27, where 'lips' and a 'tongue' are spoken of; also xi. 4 (end).—Extermination] A common expression for the putting away of idolatry from the theocratic community; Deut. xiii. 5(6), xvii. 7, &c.

<sup>5</sup> God's felt presence, the pledge of Zion's security. The sign of this presence shall be some new and special exhibition of the Divine power, hence the statement, Jehovah shall create :—'Nam verbum creandi, quo hic usus est Esaías, indicat ipissimum esse Dei opus, non hominum' (Musculus). The word bara does not occur again in I. Isaiah (see crit. note).—Upon the

CHAPTER V.

ISRAEL'S ripeness for judgment, expressed first under the veil of a parable, then in a list of the national sins, to which the corresponding punishments are specified. The chapter bears evident marks of artistic arrangement. Ewald, who on very plausible grounds attaches parts of chaps. ix. and x. to it, proposes to distribute it thus,—Introduction, vv. 1-7; section I, vv. 8-10, 17; II. 11-16; III. 18-24. He makes a fresh discourse begin at v. 25 (the Introduction), after which follows ix. 8-12 (section I.), 13-17 (section II.), 18-21 (section III.), x. 1-4 (section IV.), and as a finale v. 26-30.

'Site' (mākōn) here, as xviii. 4 and often, = 'sanctuary' (compare Arab. maqām).—A cloud by day . . . ] The first of a long series of references to the Exodus (see Ex. xiii. 21, 22). The powers of the world will be as impotent for harm as the Egyptians were at the Exodus.—Upon all (the) glory . . . ] The phrase is so abrupt as to be hardly explicable; have not some words fallen out? Dr. Weir remarks: 'There is an evident contrast between the true glory (that of Jehovah and that which he gives) and all false glory. Over the glory which is not of Jehovah—such as that described in chap. ii.—there is no covering. It cannot endure. It speedily fades. But over the glory of Jehovah and his redeemed there is a covering.' This is a worthy meaning, I admit (comp. xxiv. 23 end), but rather divined from the context than unfolded from the five Hebrew words. See crit. note (vol. ii.).

<sup>c</sup> It (Zion) shall be a pavilion . . . ] Comp. Ps. xxvii. 5, xxxi. 20. 'There shall be protection not only against greater evils, but even against lesser inconvenience: so perfect shall be the happiness of God's people in those days; comp. xlix. 10' (Dr. Weir). 'By day' seems to me to have intruded by a clerical error from the preceding verse; otherwise we should have a corresponding 'by night' in the next line.

—A love-song] By this reading 'we avoid the great impropriety of making the author of the song, and the person to whom it is addressed, to be the same' (Lowth).

—Height] Lit. horn ; an expression, common in Arabic for a small isolated eminence. Comp. the famous Kurún Hattin (horns of Hattin), the scene of Saladin's victory over the last Crusaders ; also, perhaps, Ashteroth-Karnaim (Gen. xiv. 5). Apertos Bacchus amat colles, Virg. Georg. ii. 113.

<sup>2</sup> See the striking parallel in the Synoptic Gospels (Matt. xxi. 33-41, &c.), and the allusion in Ezra ix. 9, end. Ps. lxxx. is also probably composed with reference to Isaiah's allegory. —Choice vines] Same word as in Jer. ii. 21 : 'Yet I had planted thee a noble vine' (A.V.) ; other forms in xvi. 8, Gen. xlix. 11. The deep red colour of the grapes was the origin of the name in Hebr.

—Tower] i.e., a watch-tower ; see on v. 5.

<sup>3</sup> The application. The prophet loses himself in the thought of his Divine sender. He first calls upon his hearers to act as arbitrators ; but they are condemned (see v. 5) by their evil conscience (comp. Luke xx. 16), and listen silently to their sentence, viz. that the vineyard be left to itself, without any fostering care, either from earth or from heaven. For heaven, too, is concerned, the mention of the clouds in v. 6 preparing the way for the solemn statement in v. 7. The picture can still be recognised as drawn to the life. Southern Palestine, especially 'the bare slopes of Hebron, of Bethlehem, and of Olivet,' abounds in enclosures of loose stone, each with a square grey tower at the corner (Stanley, Sinai and Pal., 1st ed., p. 413). —And he hoped . . .] The assonances of the following words in the Hebr. are inimitable.

<sup>7</sup> Bloodshed] Lit. shedding. Some have objected to this rend., because murder is not expressly mentioned in the subsequent complaints. But chap. v. cannot be treated by itself. The developments are new, but all the fundamental ideas are those of chaps. i.-iv. Now murder is certainly a prevalent sin, according to these chapters (i. 15, 21, iv. 4), not to mention that 'laying field to field' sometimes involved bloodshed (1 Kings xxi. —A cry] either from the blood of the murdered, according to the striking symbolic language of Gen. iv. 10, Job xvi. 18, or from the oppressed (James v. 4).

<sup>8</sup> Here begins the evidence of Israel's criminality before Jehovah. One by one the national sins are counted up, and each receives an exactly suitable punishment. The first sin is the attempt to concentrate the landed property in a few hands.—Who join house to house . . . ] i.e., by violently expelling the poorer proprietors, see Job xx. 19, Mic. ii. 1-5, Ezek. xlv. 18 ; and comp. Deut. xix. 14, Job xxiv. 2. Whatever be the date of 'jubilee' as a law of the state, the accumulation of landed properties was diametrically opposed to the spirit and early practice of the traditional Israelitish law of land-tenure (comp. 1 Kings xxi. 4). Comp. Mr. Fenton's illustrations of this land-law from the systems of Village Communities, Early Hebrew Life, 1880. Pliny's complaint that the latifundia had ruined Italy has only a distant relation to our passage.—To dwell alone] Comp. Ps. xlix. 11 : 'They have called lands by their own names' (Del.) ; Job xxii. 8 : 'And the man of force, to him belongeth the land, and he who is respected shall dwell therein.'

<sup>9</sup> In mine ears . . . ] All agree that some word or words are necessary to complete the text. Jewish scholars suggest 'The cry of the oppressed hath come up,' and 'saith,' or 'for I am' (before 'Jehovah Sabáoth') :—so A.E., Kimchi, Luzatto. The moderns mostly understand 'And hath revealed himself' (viz. Jehovah Sabáoth), comparing xxii. 14 (a doubtful passage, however). But I do not feel certain that such important words can be left to be understood ; my own impression is that some words have dropped out of the text. The kameç in be'osnai shows that those who affixed the points supposed an ellipsis.

<sup>10,17</sup> Retributive justice : barrenness sent upon the ill-gotten land.—Ten days' work] i.e., so much ground as a yoke of oxen can plough in a day.—One bath] A liquid measure = about 7 gallons, 4 pints.—A homer] A dry measure = 32 pecks, 1 pint. Assyrian, imer.—An ephah] The tenth part of a homer.—And lambs . . . ] The transference of these words was suggested by Ewald. 'Lambs' and 'sojourners' in alt. read. were probably meant to be taken as descriptions of the meek-spirited Jewish sojourners in Babylon. If we once admit that 'lambs' is to be taken literally, we must give up 'sojourners,' which can no longer be explained naturally. (Comp. ed. 2, where 'sojourning' was adopted, with reference to the 'lambs' of the nomad pastoral tribes.)

<sup>12</sup> Lute and cymbal] Comp. Am. vi. 5, 6. On the nature of these instruments see an excursus by Wetzstein, in Delitzsch's Jesaja, 2nd ed.—The work of Jehovah] History being the realisation of God's eternal purposes (comp. xxxvii. 26, ii. 11), whether of grace, or, as the next verse shows them to be here ('unawares') of punishment.

<sup>14</sup> Therefore Sheól . . . ] To understand this passage, we must remember that there was a twofold conception of Sheól or Hades. First, it was localised underground. Hence one of the synonyms for Hades both in Hebrew and Assyrian is 'the pit.' Hence too perhaps 'the valley of deadly shade' (Ps. xxiii. 4), and still more certainly phrases in Ps. lxiii. 9, lxxxvi. 13. Comp. note on xxxviii. 10. Next, it was conceived of as a person; comp. xiv. 9 (note), xxviii. 15, Hos. xiii. 14, Jon. ii. 2, Cant. viii. 6, Prov. i. 12, xxx. 16, Rev. vi. 8, xx. 13, 14. The two conceptions are very closely connected; thus the Greek Hades and the Teutonic Hel were variously applied to the infernal ruler and to his, or her, kingdom; comp. too the notion of the stars as both material and spiritual, Job xxxviii. 7. The Jews also, like the Greeks, spoke of a 'king of terrors' (Job xviii. 14), and the Apocalypse gives us this king's name—Abaddon (Rev. ix. 11), which is a synonym for Sheól in Prov. xv. 11.—Sheól is here treated as a feminine (like the names of countries); in xiv. 9b (see note) it becomes a masculine.

—Down goeth her splendour] 'Splendour' = nobility. The phrases chosen form a striking contrast with the still, dim, and mournful life of Hades. It has been inferred from the Biblical descriptions (e.g. Job iii. 13, &c.) that the shades (Rephāim) in Sheól share a common lot, but against this may be urged (1) that the Hades of the N. T. comprehended two large divisions for the good and the bad respectively ('Abraham's bosom' and Geenna), though of course the distinction may not have been known to Isaiah, and may have been affected by non-Jewish influences; and (2) that the Babylonians and Assyrians seem to have recognised a difference among the shades corresponding to their conduct upon earth (comp. on xiv. 9).—The parallel Assyrian view of Hades may be best gathered from the Legend of Ishtar in the sixth tablet of the Izdubar Series (see Schrader, Die Höllefahrt Ishtar, 1874, Smith's Chaldean Genesis, ed. Sayce, 1880, pp. 239–246). It is, however, only Assyrian by adoption; its origin is Accadian. This accounts, as Schrader remarks, for its non-occurrence among those Semitic nations which, like the Arabs, preserved the freshness of their individuality.

<sup>15</sup> The words of this and the following verse are mainly taken from ii. 9, 11, 17, but with a modification in the meaning.

<sup>16</sup> The holy God . . . ] Since Israel will not 'count Him holy' (viii. 13) by obeying His messages and His word, Jehovah must restore the balance by a judicial display of His righteousness.

<sup>18-23</sup> Short woes on various sorts of impiety, connected by their common share in the retribution described in v. 24. The first, on those who draw iniquity with cords of ungodliness. 'Ungodliness' is the disposition which deliberately seeks for opportunities of committing 'iniquity.' Literally, it means 'emptiness.' In their 'emptiness' of true religion, these men allow themselves to be yoked to sin like beasts of burden. The same figure in the Rig-Veda, ii. 48, 'undo the rope of sin' (transl. Max Müller). Alt. rend. means, in one form, that they not only fall into sin, but actually court it; or, in the other form, that by persisting in sin they invite punishment (comp. the Hindu and Buddhist doctrine of karma).

<sup>19</sup> The climax of their sin:—scoffing unbelief in the Divine retribution (comp. Am. vi. 3, Jer. xvii. 15).—That we may know it]. Viz., by experience (ix. 9).

<sup>20</sup> The second short woe on those who confound or rather reverse the distinctions of good and evil, who say 'Fair is foul, and foul is fair.' Comp. Job xvii. 12.

<sup>22, 23</sup> The fourth, on corrupt judges who sacrifice justice to meet the demands of an expensive luxuriousness.—Who are mighty ones . . . ] 'Very valiant trencher-

the righteousness of the righteous from him. <sup>24</sup> Therefore, as the fire's tongue devoureth stubble, and hay sinketh in a flame, so their root shall become as rottenness, and their blossom go up as dust, because they despised the instruction of Jehovah Sabáoth, and spurned the word of Israel's Holy One.

men!' Comp. Jer. xxiii. 10, end (Q. P. B.)—For mixing strong drink] The phrase means, not 'to dilute wine with water,' but to compound rightly artificial wine (see on v. 11), which was apparently stronger than the natural wine.

<sup>24</sup> All these sins have one common characteristic—the obstinate rejection of that word which is the only source of happiness. Their punishment will be sudden and self-evolved. This is expressed by a combination of two figures, the first borrowed from the custom of burning part of the stubble, the ashes being used for manure; the second from a decaying tree. Comp. Job xviii. 16.—The fire's tongue] A vivid and natural personification, comp. 1 Kings xviii. 38, Acts ii. 3.

<sup>25-30</sup> A further development of the preceding woe. The language is vague, but there seems no reasonable doubt that the Assyrians are the people referred to; the Assyrian policy of deportation has already been alluded to in v. 13. It is, however, very uncertain whether these verses originally stood at the end of this prophecy. Ewald (and so I. C. A.) regards them as containing the prologue (v. 25), and the epilogue (vv. 26-30), of a new prophecy, which was the third and last part of a prophetic work beginning at ii. 2, and the body of which prophecy was formed by ix. 8-x. 4. There are too many examples on a smaller scale of passages being misplaced in MSS., for us to consider this at all an improbable hypothesis; and while the section v. 1-24, is no loser by vv. 25-30 being thus removed from it, there can be no doubt that the prophecy ix. 8-x. 4 is greatly the gainer by it. As it stands, that prophecy is thoroughly enigmatical; but, with the addition of v. 25 and vv. 26-30, it becomes both well-rounded and fairly intelligible. Obs., the closing words of v. 25 occur four times over in ix. 8-x. 4.—It is just possible, however, that the passage in question (v. 25-30), has a double right of existence, and that though originally written for the place where Ewald would put it, Isaiah himself appended it to chap. v., without intending to remove it from its original place. He certainly does not mind repeating himself, at any rate on a smaller scale, see on v. 15, and comp. x. 22 with xxviii. 22.

<sup>25</sup> Is kindled] The prophetic perfect, if the verse be read in its present context, but the historical one, if read as Ewald would have it. According to him, the prophet's discourse rises here to a wide historical survey, extending into the past and the future. 'Once (during the present generation) Yahvé manifested himself also in Jerusalem as the God who inflicts rigorous chastisement . . . but that was only a first stroke; he threatens to strike still further. In the last words we have the fundamental utterance . . . of the four following larger strophes, in which the discourse takes new starts in order to follow out this thought' (Prophets, ii. 54). Other critics regard the judgment as belonging to the near future. Ewald naturally thinks of the earthquake of Uzziah, Am. i. 1, Zech. xiv. 5; but earthquakes probably were no rarity in Palestine (see Dr. Pusey on Am. iv. 11, and comp. Plumptre, Biblical Studies, p. 136).

so that the mountains tremble, and their carcasses become as refuse in the midst of the streets. For all this his anger turneth not back, but his hand is stretched out still.

<sup>f</sup> So Vulg., Weir, Naeg., (thick darkness, &c., Ew.).—Lo, darkness—(now) distress, and (now) light—it becometh dark in the cloudy sky thereof, Del. (but see crit. note).

<sup>26-30</sup> The future described as in prophetic vision.—A signal] So in both parts of Isaiah, xi. 10, 12, xviii. 3, xiii. 2, xlix. 22, lxii. 10.—To a distant nation] For Jehovah is the governor of the world. The 'nations' are those of the Assyrian empire.—Hisseth] The Assyrians likened to bees, as in vii. 18.—To him] because the various elements of the Assyrian army are directed by a single will, comp. xvii. 13. Obs. the effective mysteriousness of the description ;—the invaders are not yet named.—Swiftly] The Assyrians and Babylonians (Hab. i. 6, 8) were famous for their rapid marches.

<sup>28</sup> All his bows bent] The chief weapons of the Assyrians (comp. the engravings in Layard). So xxi. 15.—As flint] Shoeing being unknown, the solidity of a hoof was of prime importance. Comp. II. v. 329. Hence Am. vi. 12 'speaks of it as a thing as much impracticable to make horses run upon a hard rock, as to plough up the same rock with oxen' (Lowth). See also Ges.

<sup>29</sup> A roar . . . moaning] The roar comes from the lion in quest of prey, the moan or growl as he springs upon his victim.

<sup>30</sup> And there is a moaning over him . . .] Ewald understands this of thunder, as a sign of the Divine displeasure. But considering that the word used is the same as that in the preceding verse, it would seem that the subject of the verb must be still the lion, i.e. the enemy (Jer. vi. 23). Ew.'s object in so explaining was to provide an antithesis to the words 'and if he look unto the earth,' comp. the parallel passage, viii. 21, 22. But we have no right to interfere with the natural meaning of the text. It would be better to suppose that something has dropped out, especially as the last words of the verse are probably more or less corrupt.—Through the clouds thereof] i.e., clouds of misfortune, which hang over the earth, darkening the bright day of prosperity. A figure from eclipses, comp. viii. 22 ; Joel iii. (iv.) 15, Am. v. 18-20, Job iii. 5.

CHAPTER VI.

THE vision and prophetic call of Isaiah, and an accompanying revelation of the mingled prospects of Israel.

In several ways a noteworthy chapter, but open to various interpretations. That which will here be given assumes the absolute sincerity of the writer, and that his narrative is generically different from the poetical fictions of Goethe and Burns (the 'Zueignung' and the 'Vision'), and even from the more naïve imaginations of William Blake. The Old Testament—not to mention the records of other religions—abounds in accounts of experiences which were only possible to the inner eye (2 Kings vi. 17), but which were not the less founded on facts. It may suffice to mention the two visions of Micaiah (1 Kings xxii. 17, 19–22). If these are poetical fictions, then it is impossible to discriminate between the naïve truthfulness of primitive tradition and the scenic illusions of the contemporary novelist. And so, too, it is in the passage before us. Isaiah simply and sincerely claims to describe his personal experience. No doubt there may have been a psychological starting-point for the vision in the early visits of Isaiah to the temple of Jerusalem. The pealing trumpet on festival days, and the Hallelujahs of the choir would produce a powerful impression upon his lively imagination. This is far from explaining the peculiar experience which followed, but an impression of this kind would naturally determine the general form of the vision.

It is, however, quite consistent with a belief in Isaiah's veracity to hold that the significance of the vision was not at first realised by him in all its fulness. As Tholuck has remarked, the intelligibility of what a prophet saw and heard in his inner man did not of itself involve his comprehension of its meaning. The difference between Moses and the ordinary prophet consists, we are told, in this, that Jehovah spoke with the former 'mouth to mouth, even visibly, and not in dark speeches (or enigmas)' (Num. xii. 8), and the revelation connected with Isaiah's inaugural vision must, unless communicated magically, have been a 'dark speech' to him at first. The youth, whose 'fervid zeal breaks forth on the first word of encouragement,' could not surely have at once realised that his mission would only lead to the confirmation of his people in their unbelief. As a matter of fact, we find that Isaiah's hopefulness varies at different stages of his career, but that he only once again paints the future in colours of such a lurid hue, viz. xxxii. 13, 14. Now, if at the very outset he had received a distinct assurance that his ministry would be one 'of condemnation,' would he have been justified in indulging and expressing hopes which God had told him could not be realised? <sup>1</sup> That he was at any time addicted to rose-coloured dreams of the future is of course entirely out of the question. But it is in perfect harmony with 'the analogy of faith' to suppose that the 'dark speech' or 'enigma' of Isaiah's early vision lay in his mind and fructified, till at length he attained that full insight into its meaning which is expressed in vv. 9-13. The immediate object of the vision was to set before Isaiah the ideal of prophecy as a life-work, as opposed to the primitive view connecting it too closely with isolated ecstatic moments. Isaiah stands, in consequence of this revelation, between two schools of prophecy. To his predecessors, the source of inspiration was more or less external and intermittent; to him, it was internal and perennial. Even Amos (if, at least, chaps. vii.-ix. are to be interpreted literally) seems to have needed to be occasionally rapt into the ecstatic state; Isaiah, so far as we know, had but one vision, but that one gave him a stimulus and a theme for his whole ministry.

<sup>1</sup> Comp. I. C. A., pp. 21, 22. The position there asserted I have here substantially maintained, though, as I hope, with greater clearness and decision. The doctrine of 'a gracious proportion between the revelation vouchsafed and the mental state of the person receiving it' is admitted even by orthodox critics in Germany, and it may be hoped that it will soon become more prevalent in England.

Compare the inaugural visions of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the form of which was presumably influenced by the vision of Isaiah. The superior genius of the latter is unmistakable.

It is a probable conjecture that chap. vi. originally formed the preface to a small collection of prophecies of Isaiah, viz. either chaps. ii.-v., or more probably vii. 1-ix. 7.

<sup>1</sup> In the death-year . . .] B.C. 740. It has been doubted whether the vision took place before or after the death of Uziah. But if the latter, should we not expect 'in the first year of king Jotham'? The heading, too, in i. 1 favours the view that the vision dates from the reign of Uziah. At any rate, our present account of the vision belongs to a later reign.—I saw Jehovah . . .] The received text bears witness to the arbitrary procedure of the scribes of the pre-Massoretic age,<sup>1</sup> who sought to mitigate the naïve boldness of the early writers (comp. ὁ Κύριος of Sept.). Generally the Massoretic critics restored the true reading, saving their conscience, doubtless, by the rule of pronouncing Adonai where the text read Yahveh (Jehovah). Now, as to the picture presented by Isaiah, which is that of a king on his throne, attended on each side by courtiers (comp. 1 Kings xxii. 19). Isaiah stands at the threshold of the palace (see v. 4), and sees no more than 'the skirts' of the royal mantle (comp. Ex. xxxiii. 20-23). The two rows of courtiers alternately raise a cry of praise.—The palace] Heb. (ha) hēkāl = Ass. 'ikallu = great house (through Accadian). A great hall must have been the primary conception of a temple. Jehovah's heavenly palace or temple is meant here (Ps. xi. 4, xxix. 9, Hab. ii. 20), which, whatever may have been the case with the temple at Jerusalem, had no distinction between the Holy and the Holy of Holies.

<sup>a</sup> Seraphim] This is the only place in the Bible where the Seraphim are described as supernatural beings. The word s'rāphim does, it is true, occur in Num. xxi. 6, but there it means a species of venomous serpents (called s'rāphim from their 'burning' bite), which attacked the Israelites in the desert; and the singular sārāph occurs in the

with two he covered his face, and with two he covered his feet, and with two he flew. <sup>3</sup> And the one kept crying to the other and saying, Holy, holy, holy is Jehovah Sabaoth, The whole same sense in Num. xxi. 8, Deut. viii. 15, Isa. ~~xxvi~~ 29 (see note), xxx. 6. Now, although it is quite conceivable (considering the analogy of Ezekiel's Cherubim) that animal forms might be introduced into a description of heaven, it does not appear that Isaiah did regard the seraphim as animals in form, as there is nothing but their wings and their loud voice to distinguish them physically from ordinary men. It is his practice, moreover, as of the Old Testament writers in general, to use familiar phrases of mythical origin, giving them a new turn or a deeper, or at least a harmless, meaning. No class of myths is more abundant than that of serpent-myths,<sup>1</sup> and it would be strange if no trace of their currency in Palestine could be found in the Old Testament. But how are we to reconcile the differences between the two Biblical uses of the word 'seraphim'? We may, I think, get some light by considering the function of the Seraphim in Isaiah. They are essentially the divine guards, who keep everything that is profane or unclean at a distance. In this respect, they are strikingly analogous to the Cherubim. Now the Cherubim, as I have sought to show on philological and analogical grounds,<sup>2</sup> are almost certainly (I am speaking of course of the extra-Biblical, popular, mythic Cherubim) the clouds of the storm or of the sunset, comp. Ps. xviii. 10, 11, Ezek. xxviii. 13; it is but reasonable, therefore, to conjecture that the popular, mythic Seraphim are the serpent-like lightning. Isaiah uses the popular form of speech quite freely as a symbol (the 'dragon' in

xiv. 29 is also a symbol). Except in the name and the supernatural colouring, there is nothing here to remind us of the mythic origin of the Seraphim. Perhaps it was at Isaiah's suggestion that Hezekiah put down the 'brazen serpent' to which the children of Israel used to burn incense.<sup>3</sup> At any rate, this reform of Hezekiah's accounts for our hearing no more of the Seraphim after this vision of Isaiah.—The popular notion of the Seraphim as angels is of course to be rejected. They are not called 'angels,' and differ widely from the angels, as described elsewhere. They are indeed more like Titans than placid Gabriels and Raphaels.—It is noteworthy that the 'living creatures' of Rev. iv. 7, 8, are an original fusion of the Cherubim of Ezekiel with the Seraphim of Isaiah. On these kindred forms and their Oriental analogues see further in Essays, vol. ii.—Were standing above him] i.e., hovering, for with two of his wings each of them flew. —Covered his face] in adoration. More strictly 'used to cover.'

<sup>3</sup> Kept crying] Comp. Rev. iv. 8: 'They rest not day and night, saying Holy, holy, holy.'—Holy] Comp. Ps. xxix. 9: 'In his palace every one saith, Glory!' Holiness and glory are, in fact, correlative conceptions. Jehovah in Himself is 'holy,' and His manifestation of Himself is 'glory.' Nor is Jehovah only Israel's God; hence the Seraphim add, that the fulness of the whole earth is his glory (his glory is the predicate). The cry of 'Holy' is uttered three times, either because three is a favourite number of the Hebrews (comp. Jer. vii. 4), or be-earth is full of his glory. <sup>4</sup> And the foundations of the thresholds shook at the voice of him that cried, and the house became full of smoke. <sup>5</sup> And I said, Woe is me ! surely I am undone, for I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for the King, Jehovah Sabáoth, mine eyes have seen. <sup>6</sup> And there flew unto me one of the seraphim, with a stone in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar. <sup>7</sup> And he touched my mouth with it, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and forthwith gone is thy iniquity and thy sin is forgiven.

cause it is first uttered by the two choruses, and then taken up by the whole body of Seraphim (so H. Schultz, Alttest. Theologie, first ed., i. 345). Of the ancient Trinitarian interpretation, Calv. remarks, 'Quorum sententiam ego non improbo : sed si mihi res cum hereticis esset, malle firmioribus testimoniis uti.' If indeed we admit the Trinity in this Hebrew passage, why should we not also in the Assyrian passages referred to in Last Words (end of vol. ii.)?—Jehovah Sabáoth] Specially appropriate in the mouth of the Seraphim (see on i. 9).

<sup>4</sup> Of him that cried] i.e., of each one who cried.—Became full of smoke] The smoke indicates the coming into view of the dark side of the self-manifesting God, viz. His anger against sin (Naeg.). Comp. Rev. xv. 8, where the heavenly temple becomes full of smoke from the glory of God immediately after 'the seven angels' have received the 'golden vials full of the wrath of God.' Del.'s view seems to me farfetched.

<sup>5</sup> I am undone] He is awestruck as he realises God's glory and holiness and his own weakness and sin ; comp. i Sam. vi. 20, Luke v. 8. The widow of Zarephath is afraid of contact with Elijah as one who could 'call sin to remembrance' before God (1 Kings xvii. 18).—A man of unclean lips . . .] Comp. 'a pure lip,' Zeph. iii. 9. The pure lips of the Seraphim painfully reminded Isaiah of his own sins of the lips. He may have been conscious of no others : these he could not but have, according to James iii. 2, and yet his guilt must be purified, before he could receive a prophet's commission from Jehovah. He feels his guilt enhanced by his 'solidarity' with his people.—For mine eyes have seen . . .] Isaiah's second motive for fear. It is the same which is expressed in the familiar phrase of the primitive people, that 'no man can see God, and live' ; comp. Ex. xxxiii. 20.

<sup>6</sup> One of the seraphs brings a stone from the never-extinguished fire of the altar of incense to purge the lips of the predestined apostle from their earthly dross. (Dr. Weir quotes Ps. li. 15.) So Jeremiah tells us that Jehovah touched his mouth (Jer. i. 9) as an 'outward and visible sign' of his commission. But Isaiah shows a keener sense of his sinfulness than Jeremiah, and consequently is purged from that infirmity of will which afterwards cost Jeremiah such severe struggles (Jer. xx.). Fire is the sacramental sign of moral purification, Matt. iii. 11, comp. Num. xxxi. 23.—A stone] For the heavenly altar (Rev. viii. 3, ix. 13.) is formed on the model of the earthly one. Ewald rightly sees an allusion to the law in the 'Book of the Covenant' ; that altars should be constructed of earth, or of unhewn stones (Ex. xx. 25), a law which evidently arose in the nomadic period before tools were common. A word for 'altar' in Himyaritic—maslima—also has

<sup>8</sup> And I heard the voice of Jehovah, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? And I said, Here am I, send me.

<sup>9</sup> And he said, Go and say to this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not, and see ye indeed, but perceive not.

<sup>10</sup> Make the heart of this people fat, and its ears heavy, and its eyes besmear, lest it should see with its eyes, and hear with its ears, and its heart should understand, and it should be converted and be healed. <sup>11</sup> And I said, How long, Jehovah? And he said, Until cities be waste without inhabitants, and houses without men, and the ground be <sup>a</sup> left a desolation, <sup>a</sup> <sup>12</sup> and Jehovah have removed men afar off, and the deserted region be large in the midst of the land. <sup>12</sup> And

<sup>8</sup> And now Isaiah, though a mortal, is free of the heavenly precincts, and qualified to be sent, like his compeers, on the royal errands.

—Who will go for us? This is no mere 'plural of majesty'; ancient Oriental kings did not speak of themselves in the plural number. The picture is evidently that of Jehovah, 'the King,' in consultation with his trusted servants (so 1 Kings xxii. 19–22), a picture which is also perhaps suggested in Gen. i. 26. Comp. also Job ii. 1, xv. 8 (Q.P.B.)

<sup>9</sup> This people] Even Judah, under certain circumstances, is addressed contemptuously as 'this people'; so viii. 11, xxviii. 11, 14, xxxix. 13, 14.

<sup>10</sup> Make the heart . . . ] 'Heart' = understanding, as Hos. vii. 11, &c. 'No one,' observes Julius Müller, 'can withdraw himself from the range and influence of God's revelations without altering his moral status' (Doctrine of Sin, ii. 412). The obduracy, therefore, is self-caused. But as God is the first cause (Prov. xvi. 4), He must have 'made Israel to stray from his ways' (lxiii. 17, see note). Obs. 1. It is the nation as a whole which is spoken of. The phrase 'hardening of the heart' is, I think, only twice applied to individuals in books of the Old Testament, viz. to the Pharaoh of the Exodus (Ex. iv. 21, &c.) and to Sihon, king of Heshbon (Deut. ii. 30). Jews never have this phrase applied to them, but only the Jewish nation or sections of it (e.g., Isa. vi. 9, 10, xxix. 10, and here). 2. This grievous act or process has an object, or at least a compensating benefit (v. 13). As soon as the existing evil tendencies have worked themselves out, the purified 'remnant' shall create a perfectly new epoch for the nation (Duhm, Theologie der Propheten, 160).—Its eyes besmear] Comp. xxix. 10, xlv. 18. Sir Thomas Roe's chaplain mentions a son of the Great Mogul, who had had his eyes sealed up three years by his father as a punishment (Burder, Oriental Customs, i. 178).

<sup>13</sup> . . . a tenth in it] Parallel passage, Zech. xiii. 8, 9. A single judgment will not be sufficient to eradicate the evil tendencies.—As the terebinth and as the oak] (An abrupt transition, reminding us of ix. 1.) The 'extermination' is only in appearance (comp. iv. 4); Isaiah is not careful to file away in-should there yet be a tenth in it, this shall again be exterminated; as the terebinth and as the oak, of which, after the felling, a stock remaineth, a holy seed is the stock thereof.

CHAPTER VII.

THIS chapter forms the first part of a group of discourses, all connected directly or indirectly with the Syro-Israelitish war referred to in the opening verses. The latter require to be illustrated by the parallel passages in 2 Kings xvi. 5-9 (comp. xv. 37, and 2 Chr. xxviii. 5-16). Both of these appear to be less original than the narrative in Isaiah, especially that of Chronicles, which many critics go so far as to reject as absolutely unhistorical. Nor are they without excuse, not to say justification, considering the difficulty of discriminating between the traditions embodied by the Chronicler, and the adventitious matter due to his predominating regard for edification. One great stumbling-block in 2 Chr. xxviii. is the crushing defeats which it asserts to have been sustained by Ahaz (vv. 5, 6), but which are not mentioned in Kings. How, it has been plausibly asked, could Isaiah have called the two hostile kings 'smoking firebrands,' if they had just inflicted such a crushing blow on Judah? On the other hand, Dr. Caspari declares, after an elaborate investigation of the narratives, 'that nothing can be clearer than that the events of 2 Chr. xxviii. 5, &c., fall between those of the two halves of 2 Kings xvi. 5*a* and b; that the author of Kings gives a report of the beginning and the end, while the Chronicler gives a supplementary account of that which happened in the middle of the campaign. He shows us, in fact, how it was that such an extreme calamity as the siege of Jerusalem became possible.'<sup>1</sup>

Into the manifold difficulties of a historical reconstruction of this period I am not called upon to enter. I must assume, however, that the object of the northern kings, as is generally admitted, was to compel Judah to join a coalition against the common enemy of Syria and Pales-consistencies. Like those evergreen trees which, even when they are cut down, send out new shoots from the stump, so the 'tenth part' of Israel, even when almost consumed, shall have such a 'stump' or 'stock' in its pious remnant, the 'seed of holiness.' This is the bright side of the judgment, by which Isaiah constantly relieves the general gloom of his preaching (i. 27, iv. 3, x. 20, xxix. 18, xxx. 18, &c.)—A holy seed] So 'the holy seed,' Ezra ix. 2. 'Holy' = dedicated to Jehovah, with the derived meaning of inviolable (iv. 3).—Obs. There is no reference here to the Messiah; but the figure is precisely the same as that used for the Messiah in xi. 1, comp. x. 33. As soon as the pious remnant of Israel is organised, a personal stem becomes a necessary conception (at any rate in I Isaiah).

tine—Assyria. Curiously enough, Azariah or Uzziah, the grandfather of Ahaz, (or may it have been Jotham, in his father's name?) had, according to the Inscriptions, been a leading member of just such a coalition only six years before (B.C. 740).<sup>1</sup>

It will be observed that chap. vii. does not claim to be the work of Isaiah. There is also a looseness in the connection, and an occasional feebleness of style, which make even the editorship of Isaiah difficult to realise :—notice in particular the break between v. 16 and v. 17, and the cumbrous style of vv. 17–25. The same looseness of connection is apparent in chap. viii. Taken together with the very peculiar introduction to chap. vii., and the cumbrousness of vii. 17–25, it makes it a very probable conjecture that the whole section vii. 1–ix. 7 only assumed its present form long after the original utterance of the prophecies. Perhaps when the last editor took up the work, the manuscript authority used by him had become partly mutilated or illegible (comp. Last Words, vol. ii.).

In I. C. A., p. 25, I described chaps. vii. 1–ix. 7, as 'an epitome of the discourses delivered at this great national crisis,' viz. the Syrian and Israelitish invasion. This statement, however, seems to need qualification. From viii. 17 to ix. 7 there is no allusion to the Syrian invasion ; it is the formidable power of Assyria which fills the imagination of the prophet. This part of the group of prophecies is evidently later than the rest. It may be added, that at any rate chap. vii. has probably been worked up or 'restored' to the best of his ability by a comparatively late editor, on the basis of an incomplete transcript of the original epitome. Whether the latter was the work of Isaiah, or of one of Isaiah's disciples acting under his direction or at any rate in his spirit, it is, of course, impossible to say. To this partly 'restored' epitome, there appears to be prefixed an illustrative passage from the book, or section of a book, entitled, in 2 Chr. xxxii. 32, 'the vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz.' The historical setting is a characteristic which this prophecy shares in common with those in chap. xx. and chaps. xxxvi.–xxxix.

Dr. C. J. Bredenkamp of Greifswald, has examined current explanations of vii. 1–ix. 6 in an article in Luthardt's Zeitschrift, 1883, pp. 621–632. His exegetical method is bold, e.g. he connects 'that go softly' (viii. 6) with 'this people.' He denies that Isaiah expected Immanuel to be born in the near future, because of his allusion to an Assyrian invasion, apparently assuming that Isaiah's doctrine of the Messiah and his intuition of the future were already complete when he first opened the subject in public. All very disappointing in the successor of so brilliant, even though one-sided, a scholar as Wellhausen.

<sup>1</sup> Rezin] The Syrian king appears to have been the soul of the expedition : hence the singular number of the verbs. Pekah, as the Hebraist will observe, is only attached by the Vāv of association (see crit. note). The pretender to the throne of Judah, too, has a together with Pekah son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up to Jerusalem to war against it (but he was not able to war against it). <sup>3</sup>And it was told the house of David, saying, Aram <sup>4</sup>resteth upon Ephraim; and his heart shook, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the forest shake before the wind. <sup>5</sup>And Jehovah said unto Isaiah, Come, go out to meet Ahaz, thou and Shear-Yashub thy son, at the end of the conduit of the upper pool, at the highway of the fuller's field; <sup>6</sup>and say unto him, Look that thou keep calm; fear not,

Syrian name (v. 6).—Went up] The phrase has no special reference to the elevated situation of Jerusalem (Knob.), for it is used of retreating as well as of invading armies (1 Kings xv. 19, 2 Kings xii. 19, Jer. xxi. 2, xxxiv. 21, xxxvii. 5, 11). See Graf, Studien und Kritiken, 1854, p. 891, &c.—To war against it] A term for the protracted combat which went on by the gate of a besieged city (Judges ix. 45, 52, 2 Sam. xi. 20). In 2 Kings xvi. 5 it is stated that Jerusalem had been enclosed (a different word), with a view, that is, to the storming of the city.—But he was not able . . .] Presumably because some bad news (such as the approach of the Assyrians) compelled him to renounce his intention. This is an anticipative remark, like those in xx. 1, xxxviii. 21; consequently the circumstances related in the following verses should come in order of time before the last clause of v. 1.

<sup>3</sup> It was told the house of David] For the expedition was really directed against the family of David; its expressed object (v. 6) is not conquest—but a change of dynasty. In 2 Kings xvi. 5, too, there is a trace of this; for we read—not 'they besieged Jerusalem'—but 'they besieged Ahaz.' As to the 'house of David,' see on v. 13.—Resteth upon] viz. as one allied force rests upon another. According to alt. rend. the figure is taken from the appearance of a swarm of flies or locusts. But surely the

<sup>5</sup> Go out] Isaiah lived in the middle (lower) city, 2 Kings xx. 4 (Heb. text). He was now to meet Ahaz at the end of the city. By his social rank (probably), as well as by his position as a prophet, he could venture to address Ahaz unbidden. Comp. on xxxvii. 2.—Shear-Yashub] i.e., A remnant shall return (comp. x. 22). An instance of the way in which Isaiah and his family were 'for signs and for omens' (viii. 18). According to Ewald, the meaning of the name formed the subject of a revelation, now lost, which originally preceded that concerning Immanuel. It seems safer to assume that Shear-Yashub went as a witness, either to chronicle events in his memory, or for his own sake as a means of religious education.—The conduit of the upper pool] Ahaz had probably gone hither, like Hezekiah, on a similar occasion, 'to stop the waters of the fountains without the city' (2 Chr. xxxii. 3). The 'upper pool' may be the Birket-el-Mamilla = 'the dragon's well' of Neh. ii. 13; it seems to correspond to the 'lower pool' of xxii. 9. See, however, Capt. Warren, in Athenaeum, Feb. 6, 1875.

<sup>6</sup> Smoking] i.e., almost burnt out.—The son of Remaliah] Indicating the mean origin of the upstart Pekah: comp. 'the son of Kish,' 1 Sam. x. 11, 'the son of Jesse,'

neither let thine heart be soft, because of these two stumps of smoking firebrands, even for the burning anger of Rezin and Aram, and the son of Remaliah. <sup>5</sup> Because Aram hath purposed evil against thee (with) Ephraim and the son of Remaliah, saying, <sup>6</sup> Let us go up against Judah and <sup>b</sup> distress it, <sup>b</sup> and break through and win it for ourselves, and let us appoint king in the midst of it the son of Tabel: <sup>7</sup> thus saith the Lord, Jehovah, It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass. <sup>8</sup> For the head of Aram is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin, <sup>c</sup> and the head of Ephraim is Samaria,

<sup>c</sup> TEXT inserts, And within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people. (Lowth transfers these words to the end of v. 9.)

xx. 30. It is rather singular that the same form of expression occurs five times in the list of Solomon's twelve provincial officers for supplying the royal tables (1 Kings iv. 8-19).

<sup>6</sup> Break through] The same word is used with reference to the fortified towns or passes commanding the entrance into a country, 2 Chr. xxi. 17 (in Hiphil), xxxii. 1 (with the same 'pregnant construction' as here, but in Kal).—The son of Tabel] The way in which this person is mentioned suggests that he was an obscure adventurer, like Pekah (2 Kings xv. 25), and his name (= 'good (is) God' in Aramaic; comp. Tabrimmon) indicates that he was a Syrian. The name occurs again among the Aramaic-speaking 'people of the land,' after the exile (Ezra iv. 7), but not, as Oppert and Schrader thought, in Assyrian inscriptions of this period, since Idibil and Dibil (i.e. Abdeel) are better readings (Friedr. Del.).

<sup>8-9</sup> For the head of Aram is Damascus . . .] The chief cities of Syria and Israel are Damascus and Samaria:—the chief city of Judah is Jerusalem. Those two powers which the prophet regards as essentially profane or secular and unconnected with Jehovah, are and shall continue to be confined within their allotted range. So, too, the rulers of Syria and Israel are Rezin and Pekah—puny mortals, whereas (it is implied) the true king of Judah is Jehovah. But in the very middle of this symmetrical structure of parallelism we are surprised by a precise chronological statement, not strictly germane to the subject, and unparalleled in its range, either in the acknowledged prophecies of Isaiah or in the works of Isaiah's contemporaries. There is nothing (except a superstitious belief in the unalterableness of the Biblical texts) to prevent us from holding that some pious student and editor of Isaiah inserted the words, honestly believing that Isaiah must or might have foreknown the date of the event referred to. He knew his author well, for the disputed clause is in perfect accordance with the style of Isaiah (comp. xxi. 16, xvi. 14, xvii. 1). But under the ægis of Isaiah he addressed his own contemporaries, and the lesson he wished them to learn was this, that if Judah did not cast aside all human confidences, and rely exclusively on Jehovah, it would share the fate of the sister-kingdom.—And now as to the date fixed in this prediction. According to the most ancient theory (Jerome, Euseb., A.E.), it is the captivity of Tiglath-Pileser, or Sargon, which is referred to;—against this, see Pusey, Minor Prophets, i. 148.

and the head of Samaria is the son of Remaliah. . . . If ye have no faith, verily ye shall not have continuance. <sup>10</sup> And Jehovah spoke further to Ahaz, saying, <sup>11</sup> Ask thee a sign of Jehovah thy God, <sup>a</sup> deep unto Sheól or high unto heaven.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> So the Greek versions (but not Sept.), Vulg., Ew., Del.—Ask something in the depth, or in the height above, Ges., Weir, Naeg. (The read. is the same in both cases. See Ewald, Lehrbuch d. A. S., § 93, 3.)

X Another old view is that of Archbishop Usher, followed by Hengst., that the reference is to the transplantation of a foreign population to Samaria in the days of Esarhaddon (Ezra iv. 2). Bosanquet's confirmation of this view from Assyriology (Smith's Assurbanipal, p. 363) seemed at first almost decisive; and Schrader, after him, argued, on the same grounds, that even after 722 Samaria was 'quite a respectable power, with which the Assyrian kings had to reckon' (Jahrbücher f. prot. Theologie, i. 333), so that the kingdom was not thoroughly 'broken' by Sargon's capture of Samaria. Unfortunately, this has been upset by the discovery that the true reading of the name on which the above view depended was, not Usimuruna (Samaria), but Samsi-muruna; comp. Halévy, Revue des études juives, No. 3, p. 12, Friedr. Del., Paradies, p. 287. Archbishop Usher's explanation, however, is still the most reasonable one. The mixture of races in Samaria was the final blow to the existence of the nation, and if we reckon 65 years from 736 B.C., assumed as the date of Isaiah's meeting with Ahaz, we come to 671, which may very well have been the year when Samaria was finally 'broken.' Ezra iv. 2 ascribes the blow to Esarhaddon, but v. 10 speaks of Asnapper, which is probably a corruption (see crit. note) of Assurbanipal, the name of Esarhaddon's son and successor, who was also his co-regent in his lifetime. If ye have no faith . . . ] Or, if ye hold not fast, verily ye shall not stand fast (rendering in I. C. A.). There is a designed assonance between the clauses; we find it again in 2 Chr. xx. 20 (see Hebr.); also Hab. ii. 4.

<sup>10</sup> And Jehovah spoke further . . . ] The form of the phrase is peculiar, and only occurs elsewhere in viii. 5. Here, however, it is doubly remarkable, because it is not a direct communication from Jehovah to Ahaz which follows, but a mediate one through the prophet. In spite of Delitzsch's deep remark pointing to the prophet's consciousness of Jehovah, the most natural view, considering the general character of the chapter, seems to me that 'Jehovah' is an error either of the scribe or of the editor of the section. The following words were perhaps spoken at a different time and place from vv. 4-9.

<sup>11</sup> Ask thee a sign] It is clear that something had passed between Isaiah and Ahaz, through our ignorance of which we cannot thoroughly understand the sequel. Very probably it had some reference to the plan of an embassy to Assyria (2 Kings xvi. 7), already maturing in the royal mind. Chronology is not opposed to this view, for it is only stated in vv. 2, 5, that a confederacy had been formed, not that the hostile armies had as yet set foot on the soil of Judah. We may well suppose that Isaiah was as unfavourable to an Assyrian as he was afterwards to an Egyptian alliance, and that he did all in his power to dissuade or deter the king from it. In vv. 17-25 his language is deterrent; in the lost passage which should precede v. 11 it was probably of a persuasive character. 'Trust in Jehovah,' the prophet may have said, 'and your highest hopes will be surpassed.' And now he continues, 'Ask thee a sign of this.'

<sup>12</sup> But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I put Jehovah to the test. <sup>13</sup> And he said, Hear, I pray you, O house of David; is it too little for you to weary men, that ye will

What sort of sign did Isaiah mean on this occasion?—Deep unto Sheól or high unto heaven] i.e., say some, Isaiah will either call up from the dead the shade of some mighty prophet or hero—a Samuel or a David—or ‘darken the sun at midday’ (comp. the wonder of the sundial, xxxviii. 8). To the second alternative, no strong objection can be taken, but the first is open to criticism. It is true that Isaiah must have believed in Jehovah’s lordship over Sheól (1 Sam. ii. 6), and true that there would be a certain fitness in the prophet’s availing himself of the presumed fondness of the king for necromancy. On the other hand, (1) it seems probable that an offer of this kind would have been expressed more distinctly, and (2) we find Isaiah, at the very same period, denouncing necromantic practices in the strongest manner (viii. 19). It is safer, therefore, to take both expressions, ‘deep unto Sheól’ and ‘high unto heaven’ metaphorically, comparing lvii. 9 (end), and still better Job xi. 7, 8:—

Canst thou find out the depth of Elohim?
Or canst thou find out the end of Shad-dai?

Heights of heaven! what canst thou do?
Deeper than Sheól! what canst thou know?

Nothing is impossible to Jehovah; therefore Ahaz has perfect freedom of choice, provided that he asks in reverence. He may ask, for instance, for the restoration of some lost child from the dead, or for any seemingly simpler ‘providential arrangement’ (comp. 1 Sam. x. 7), but not for anything inconsistent with, or capable of being turned against, the true religion. Contrast, in passing, the Old and New Testaments in their estimate of ‘signs.’

—Jehovah thy God] Ahaz was a genuine worshipper of Jehovah, but also of ‘other gods beside’ him. His name in full appears to have been Jehoahaz (Yahukhazi in Tiglath-Pileser II.’s great Inscription). This is not inconsistent with the expression ‘my God’ in v. 13 (see note).

<sup>12</sup> But Ahaz said . . .] Ahaz is incredulous. No doubt he has prophets of his own, in whose word he places more confidence than in that of Isaiah. He desires, therefore, to break off the conference under the hypocritical pretext of not wishing to ‘test Jehovah’ (a sin springing from unbelief, Ex. xvii. 7, Deut. vi. 16).

<sup>13</sup> And he said] Here again the conjecture is a probable one that the following discourse was spoken at a fresh time and place. It is highly noteworthy that the prophecy is first of all directed to the house of David, not to Ahaz alone. The house of David means all the various branches of the royal family, and ought strictly to include the ‘house of Nathan’ (Zech. xii. 12, comp. Luke iii. 27, 31). It would seem that this princely order was almost as numerous a body in Judah as it was, according to Brugsch, in Egypt, and that it was able to exercise a decisive political influence. On the former point, see I. C. A., p. 88 (top), and comp. Zeph. i. 8; on the latter, see three passages in Jeremiah, where the members of the royal family receive the designation ‘kings of Judah’ (xvii. 20, Hitz., xix. 3, xxv. 18), just as the queen-mother is called ‘the mistress’ (Jer. xiii. 18, 1 Kings xv. 13, 2 Kings x. 13). They appear to have monopolised the judicial function (see Jer. xxi. 11, 12), so that the people had frequent opportunities of testing their fitness for the crown. Hence on at least one occasion the unpopularity of the eldest son of the king led to his being excluded from the succession by ‘the people of the land’ (2 Kings xxiii. 30: comp. vv. 31, also weary my God? <sup>14</sup> Therefore Jehovah himself shall appoint you a sign; behold, * the young woman * is with

* So Hitzig, R. Williams, Naeg., and (in effect) Ges. The maiden (Jungfrau), Ew., Del. The virgin, Weir, observing, 'But the Hebr., strictly speaking, does not correspond to our 'virgin.' 'A young woman,' however, is also admissible, if Ewald be right in regarding the article as that of species (like 'the lion').

36). In fact, the queen-mother <sup>1</sup> and the royal princes formed a numerous and influential upper caste, which only a king of unusual force of character, like Hezekiah or Josiah, could venture, and that rather timidly, to oppose. For instances of high officials belonging to the royal family, see 1 Kings xxii. 26, 2 Kings xxv. 25, 2 Chr. xxviii. 7, Jer. xxxviii. 6. See further in Last Words, vol. ii. (Graf, on Jer. xxi. 11, would extend the meaning of the term 'house of David' to all who enjoyed any office or dignity under the crown, comparing our phrase 'the court.' Similarly Hitz. But this is very unnatural, and the analogy of Egypt is rather against it.—My God] Yet in v. 10 Isaiah had said 'thy God.' True, but Ahaz had forfeited his religious rights by his unbelief. So in some threatening prophecies (e.g. vi. 10) 'my people' becomes 'this people.'

<sup>14</sup> The Lord himself] Whom ye reject.—Behold] A forewarning of a great event.—The young woman] The prophet sees the woman selected by Jehovah with the inner eye. We need not, however, suppose that he had any other reason for mentioning her than to introduce the naming of the child (comp. Luke i. 60).

The rendering adopted has been objected to from an English and from a Hebrew point of view. But 1, it is that of a synonymous word in the A.V. of Am. ii. 7 (margin), and 2, unless the context determines otherwise, we are precluded from going beyond the strict etymological meaning of the word, which is simply 'a woman of mature age.' See crit. note.—As to the details of the interpretation, opinions are and always will be divided. There is no explanation which does not require us to make some assumption not directly sanctioned by the text. The only question is, Which assumption is most in harmony with Isaiah's early prophecies? The first theory (a) which presents itself is that started by Rashi and A.E., and adopted by Ges., Hitz., Knob., that a young woman actually present, or at any rate alive, is referred to, viz. Isaiah's wife. In favour of this, one may urge the significance of the names of other sons of Isaiah (vii. 3, viii. 3, comp. 18). But how can Isaiah have called his wife by a name so liable to be misunderstood as 'almah,' especially as in the very next chapter he gives her what was probably her recognised title, 'the prophetess' (viii. 3)? It can hardly be that this objection is adequately met by the conjecture that Isaiah had married a second wife who was at that time giving birth to a son (Ges., Dr. S. Davidson). There is also (b) the theory of Hofmann, Köhler, and Dr. Weir, that 'the young woman' = the people of Israel, as the bride of Jehovah (comp. liv. 5, Ezek. xvi., Hos. ii. 16, 19, 20, Zeph. iii. 17). Against this it may be urged : 1. that this figure of speech is reserved for the higher style of prophecy ; 2. that the advocates of the theory are not able to agree on the meaning of the birth of the child. Hofmann says the child is the regenerate people ; Dr. Weir that child-birth is simply an allegory of deliverance from danger (though the child, he inconsistently says, is also a type of the Messiah). Others (c) take the clause as to the birth of the son hypothetically. Thus Roorda, as before him substantially Eichhorn, explains it to mean, 'Any young woman who is at this time with child may call her son by the name Immanuel,' as a memorial of the foretold deliverance (Orientalia, 1840, pp. 129, 130). So Kuenen and Prof. Robertson Smith (see Last Words, vol. ii.). But thus we get no sign at all, whether of promise or of threatening—not to mention the appeal to Immanuel as an individual in viii. 8. There remains<sup>1</sup> the theory (d) that the 'young woman' is the mother of the Messiah, whose advent, as Ewald has well pointed out, was expected by Isaiah to synchronise with the Assyrian invasion (see chaps. ix. xi.). The touch of passion, to which Sir E. Strachey has already called attention in the opening words (Hebrew Politics, p. 104), suggests that there was something extraordinary in the child beyond such external peculiarities as name and food. There is, besides, a prophecy of Isaiah's contemporary, Micah (v. 3-5), which may perhaps be held to allude to the two Isaianic prophecies of God-with-us and Wonder-Counsellor :—

'Therefore will he (Jehovah) give them up, until a travelling woman hath brought forth, and (until) the remnant of his brethren return unto the children of Israel ; and he (the Messiah) shall stand, and shall shepherd in the strength of Jehovah, &c. ; for then shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.'

It is true that there is no mention of Immanuel's being of Davidic origin, but strictly speaking there is no mention of the Davidic origin of the Messiah even in chap. ix. At any rate, there is nothing here to exclude such an ancestry ; and Justin Martyr (Dial. c. Tryph. 68) long ago argued in favour of it from the prophecy being addressed to the 'house of David.' It is true, again, that nothing is said of the child Immanuel's growing up to be a king and a deliverer. But this only confirms the view, already adopted as probable, that chap. vii. consists of an incomplete summary of Isaianic discourses ; or again (as in I. C. A., p. 31) we may regard this prophecy as the first rough sketch of the Messianic doctrine, to be filled up on subsequent opportunities. Why indeed should we expect a single prophecy (especially if only handed down from notes) to be as complete as an article in a dictionary ?—The two really important objections are these : 1. Is it conceivable that Isaiah expected the Messiah to pass through the period of exile predicted in vi. 11-13, before he restored the kingdom to the regenerate remnant of Israel ? The answer is that, on grounds external to this prophecy, the concluding portion of chap. vi. is probably the latest portion of the group formed by chapters vi.-ix. 7 ; whereas the prophecies in chap. vii. are probably the earliest, and in many respects the least altered, of the group. When the prophecy of Immanuel was delivered, Isaiah could not have had such a full conception of the events preceding the appearance of the Messiah as he attained afterwards. And 2. Would the birth of a child from an unnamed and unknown woman be recognised as a sign by Ahaz? The answer is, 1. that this was unimportant to Isaiah. Ahaz and his house were judicially hardened, and their unbelief on this occasion was a fresh degree in the hardening (comp. xxix. 10, 11). The prophecy was really addressed to those who could receive it, such as Isaiah's disciples (comp. viii. 16). And, 2. that the obscurity of the mother of Immanuel was part of the punishment which must, from the context, have been included in the prophecy. It was neither Ahaz himself, nor a son of Ahaz, who was the destined deliverer of God's people, but the child of a nameless and obscure mother (Del.).—Is with child] So we should render, and not 'shall be with child,' in view of the parallel passage, Gen. xvi. 11 (Judg. xiii. 5, 7 is doubtful), and of vv. 15, 16.—Immanuel] i.e., God (is) with us, or, on our side; compare Ittiel. This symbolic name is a part of the sign. The meaning is determined by viii. 10.

<sup>15</sup> Milk-curd and honey shall he eat] These are not mentioned, as we should have expected, as delicacies, but to imply privation (this is clear from v. 22). For a lad arrived at years of discretion (see next note) to have no other food indicated that 'the land of Immanuel' had been brought very low. Obs., this particular detail would be true of a multitude of other Hebrew children, which shows that it can only form a subordinate part of the 'sign.'—To reject the evil and choose the good] A fuller phrase for 'to discern between good and evil.' Hitz. explains it of pleasant and unpleasant food (as 2 Sam. xix. 35), but most critics take it in a moral sense (as Gen. ii. 9, Deut. i. 39, 1 Kings iii. 9). The second view will throw the period named in the next verse rather more forward than the first, and as the circumstance of eating milk and honey is to be a 'sign,' this view seems the preferable one.

<sup>16</sup> For before . . .] A somewhat vague definition, which makes it all the more unlikely that Isaiah himself should have written v. 8 b. Hitz.'s view would fix the term at the end of the second year, for a Jewish child was weaned in his third (2 Macc. vii. 27).—Deserted shall the land become] i.e., the people of Syria and (N.) Israel shall be carried captive by the Assyrians. Comp. 2 Kings xv. 29, xvi. 9, and Smith's The Assyrian Canon, pp. 121-125.

<sup>17</sup> The abruptness of the transition is remarkable, and, taken together with the cumbrous style of the sequel, confirms the theory that chap. vii. is based on incomplete, though authentic, notes. We are now introduced to a dark side in the advent of Immanuel. Had Jehovah 'found faith' in Israel's rulers and representatives, Immanuel would have been simply a sign of promise; as it is, he is also a sign of threatening. The Syrians and Israelites shall indeed be removed, but shall be succeeded by a worse foe than Judah had ever had before, 'the king of Assyria.' It is probable enough that this prophecy only confirmed Ahaz in his resolution of sending an embassy to Assyria. He may have hoped thus to render the fulfilment of the prophecy impossible.—Departing. Obs. the deep impression produced by the severance of the northern tribes. [Hitz. and Knobel omit the last words as a gloss, as also in v. 20 and in viii. 7. Ew. and Del. retain them, but without offering any solid reason. Surely they fit in here very badly, and mar the effect of the revelation in v. 18. Such ultra-distinctness is just the manner of the interpolators.]

<sup>18</sup> According to Ewald, a long piece has fallen out between vv. 17 and 18, relating how Isaiah left the king, and went home, and explained his intuitions of the future, and the truths to which Ahaz would not listen, in the circle of his disciples. Yet, if v. 15 was spoken to Ahaz (which Ew. allows), must not v. 22 have been so too, for without it v. 15 is unintelligible? That something, however, has been lost with regard to Immanuel seems highly probable.—Shall hiss to the flies . . . ] Isaiah had already said (v. 26) that Jehovah would hiss to 'the distant nations,' with a description which precisely fits the Assyrians. He now refers to them and to Egypt by name, and adds that the two great rivals shall come to a collision in Judah. There is nothing to indicate that the intervention of Egypt was out of regard to Rezin and Pekah, as Knobel and Kuenen suppose. It is rather a subsequent phase of the judgment upon Judah.—The Egyptians are compared to the swarms of venomous flies which infest the region of the Nile (see on xviii. 1), the Assyrians to the bees of their native woods and mountains (comp. Deut. i. 44, Ps. cxviii. 12).—At the end . . . ] i.e., in the whole extent of country watered by the Nile and its arms ; comp. lvi. 11, Gen. xix. 4, xlvi. 2 (Hebr.).

ing . . .] Lit., to . . . The form reminds us of the legends on seals, To—i.e., belonging to—such and such a person. The context, however, forbids such an explanation here. It is best to take the inscription as the heading or title of an as yet unwritten chapter of prophecy. In one sense, of course, the heading was itself a prediction—it pointed to a child, Maher-shalal-hash-baz, soon to be born. It would, of course, powerfully excite curiosity. As to the name itself, see on fourth verse.

* So Sept., Pesh., Targ., Hitz. TEXT, I will take.

<sup>2</sup> Take for me . . . ] 'For me,' because the prophecy was Jehovah's ; Isaiah was but an instrument. 'Witnesses,' viz., to the people at the fulfilment of the prophecy that it was no forgery. Uriah may be the high-priest mentioned so unfavourably in 2 Kings xvi. 10, 11 ; this, however, is not certain, still less certain is Bertholdt's and Bleek's identification of Zechariah with the author of the prophecy in Zech. ix.-xi.

<sup>4</sup> Maher-shalal-hash-baz ] i.e., probably 'Swift (swiftly cometh) spoil, speedy (speedily cometh) prey.' Imitated by Goethe, in his Habebald—Eilebeute (Faust, act iv. sc. 3). It has been doubted whether the child can actually have borne such a name, but the analogies of Shear-Yashub, of the compound religious names in 1 Chr. iii. 20, iv. 3, xxv. 4, Ezra viii. 4, and of the names of the Assyrian kings, may dispel the doubt. It might of course have been shortened in every-day use, as Abijah was shortened into Abi, Jehoahaz into Ahaz, &c. — The prediction of Maher-shalal-hash-baz is not invested with such solemnity as that of Immanuel. But the two are in several respects allied. In both the birth of a child is the pledge of deliverance. In both the arrival of the child at a certain age is the signal for the fulfilment of the prophecy. Both, too, refer to the same event. True, a child can say Father and Mother before it can clearly discern between good and evil. But then the date of the latter prophecy must be placed at least half a year later than that of vii. 14-16, on account of v. 3. In an inferior degree, therefore, the birth of Maher-shalal-hash-baz may be called a 'sign' (comp. viii. 18).

<sup>5</sup> This people ] The phrase is most commonly applied to Judah (e.g., vi. 10, xxviii. 14, xxix. 13, Jer. viii. 5, xiii. 10), but in ix. 15 (16) is used of Israel, and in Jer. xxxiii. 24 it is even applied to the heathen neighbours of the Jews. We are therefore by no means shut up to the view of Ewald (entirely inconsistent with vii. 2), that most of the population of Jerusalem were in favour of the pretender Ben-Tabel (vii. 6), and wished well to the invading army. It is much more natural to suppose, with De Dieu, that 'this people' means N. Israel, Judah being first mentioned in v. 8. There is the same transition from Israel to Judah in ix. 8—x. 4 and xxviii. 1-6. — Math rejected the waters of Shiloh ] Comp. Hos. i. 2 b. To 'reject' in a religious sense = to apostatise from (comp. Jer. xvii 13). But why 'the waters of Shiloh' ? For this reason. The prophets gloried in Jerusalem's not possessing large streams, as means of defence. They knew that Jehovah would supply the place of 'rivers and canals' (xxxiii. 21), and be like a stream, whose arms 'make glad the city of God' (Ps. xlv. 4). The brook of Shiloah, therefore, which flowed past Zion and Moriah, became a type of the gracious God enthroned in the temple. But since the Davidic dynasty alone had Jehovah's sanction (comp. Hos. iii. 5), the phrase is also a figure for the mild government of the Davidic family. — Which flow softly] Dr. Neubauer supposes that Ahaz had made a conduit for the more rapid passage of the waters of Shiloah, and that the people ironically said of them that they still went but softly. The first part of the conjecture has a basis in the Talmudic passage (Erachin 10 b) quoted by Delitzsch ad loc., but it is by no means necessary to explain Isaiah's expression. Soft-flowing waters are a natural emblem of humiliation; comp. with Ges., Virg. Æn. viii. 726, 'Euphrates ibat jam mollior undis.' — Rejoice (in union) with Rezin and the son of Remaliah] The peculiar form of the phrase is determined by the wish for an alliteration—(mā'as in the first clause, māsōs in the second). The whole passage refers primarily to Israel, whose fault was rejecting Jehovah, the true king of Israel, and cleaving to Rezin and Pekah as their champions against Assyria. But this was also in part the fault of Judah. The latter, of course, rejected Rezin, but was far (to judge from the prophecies of Isaiah) from joyful attachment to Jehovah. Hence the punishment fell on 'both the houses of Israel' (viii. 14). Instead of the beneficent overflow of the 'living waters' (Jer. xvii. 13, Ezek. xlvii. 1-12), the faithless land shall be flooded with the cruel soldiery of Assyria. But there is a difference in the fate of the two countries. Israel is swept away by the stream and absorbed; Judah, through Immanuel's help, emerges safely from the torrent.

<sup>8</sup> And shall sweep along . . .] Judah shall only escape for a time. He shall be overtaken by the torrent, and barely keep his head above the water (xxx. 28). Masses of water branching off, like wings, from the main current, shall cover the utmost extremities of the land. But Assyria shall not ultimately prevail. The safety of Judah is secured, for its real though invisible lord is Immanuel, who shall emerge out of his obscurity, with supernaturally matured powers, when the time shall have come (comp. vii. 14). — O Immanuel!] An ejaculatory prayer for the Deliverer's advent.—The not unpleasant confusion of metaphors in v. 8 may be paralleled from Wordsworth:—

shall overflow and pass over, reaching even to the neck, and the stretching out of its wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel! <sup>9</sup> <sup>d</sup> Take knowledge, <sup>d</sup> O ye peoples, <sup>e</sup> and give ear, all ye distances of the earth: gird yourselves, but ye shall break down; gird yourselves, but ye shall break down; <sup>10</sup> devise a device, but it shall come to nought: speak a word, but it shall not stand, for, 'With us is God.' <sup>11</sup> For thus said Jehovah unto me, with a strong pressure of the Hand, and warned me not to walk in the way of this people, saying, <sup>12</sup> 'Ye shall not call everything a 'holy thing' which this the Assyrians is described in vv. 21, 22 (see notes).

<sup>9</sup> At the thought of Immanuel, the prophet raises his tone. He challenges the combined nations, whether near as the Syrians and Israelites, or distant as the Assyrians, and announces their overthrow.—Gird yourselves] With your belt and weapons (see on xlv. 5).—Break down] i.e., in dismay. Used again of Assyria, xxx. 31, xxxi. 9.

<sup>11-12</sup> A short oracle, complete in itself, and probably written down (so vigorous is the style) not long after the experience described. It has no reference to the invasion of Rezin and Pekah, as most critics have supposed (see on v. 12), but explains upon what conditions the motto 'Immanuel' will be verified.

With a strong pressure . . .] 'The Hand' (or, 'the Arm of Jehovah,' liii. 1) is a personification of the self-manifesting power of Jehovah (analogous to 'the Face of Jehovah'; see on lix. 2), with reference especially, though not exclusively, (see Ex. vi. 1) to the extraordinary deeds or words of the prophets. So in the story of Elijah (1 Kings xviii. 46) and Elisha (2 Kings iii. 15). It is probable enough that in ordinary Canaanitish phraseology the phrase was descriptive of a completely passive ecstatic state, in which the self-consciousness of the prophet was entirely asleep, and that it was retained by prophets of Jehovah, like Isaiah, as having in their case a comparative degree of propriety. It is not reasonable to suppose that Isaiah ever lost his self-consciousness:—that would have been a temporary suspension of his moral life. Fortunately, we have a prophecy of his in which he has described his state when under the prophetic impulse with pictorial vividness (chap. vi.) It is remarkable that Ezekiel, living in the decline of the higher prophecy, shows a preference for a form of speech characteristic of the primitive stage, and rare among the greater prophets. See Ezek. i. 3, iii. 22, xxxvii. 1, and especially iii. 14, viii. 3. 'The Hand' only occurs again in Isaiah in xiv. 26, and according to Del. in xxviii. 2, which I doubt.—The way of this people] i.e., the low religious views of the Israelites (both of north and of south; see v. 14). Just as the Gospel-religion is called 'this way' in Acts ix. 2. Kocher (Vindicia, p. 64) asks, How could Isaiah be in danger of idolatry? But he seems to be here described as the head of a little society, some of whom may have needed this exhortation more than Isaiah.

people calleth a <sup>f</sup> holy thing,<sup>f</sup> and the object of their fear ye shall not fear, nor account it dreadful. <sup>13</sup> Jehovah Sabáoth, him shall ye count holy, and let him be your fear, and him your dread. <sup>14</sup> And he shall <sup>g</sup> shew himself as holy,<sup>g</sup> and as a stone for striking against and a rock of stumbling to both the houses of Israel, as a gin and a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem: <sup>15</sup> and many <sup>h</sup> shall stumble at it,<sup>h</sup> and fall, and be broken, and snared, and taken.'

dressed. The warning corresponds to that against necromancy in v. 19. There is to be no compromise between the worship of Jehovah and the rights and practices of a lower type of religion. Indeed, Jehovah will soon prove His exclusive right to the title of 'holy,' by the terrible ruin which, by their own fault, shall overtake the two houses of Israel. He will be a 'stone of stumbling' to the unbelievers (comp. Luke xx. 18), but (as we may supply from xxviii. 16), a sure support to the faithful; and from the suddenness of his interposition, will be like unto 'a gin and a snare' (Luke xxi. 35). No other view of this passage seems to me even plausible, and Grätz deserves much credit for having revived the forgotten emendation of Secker. Isaiah could not forbid his disciples to banish the word 'confederacy' (or rather 'conspiracy') from their vocabulary—for this is what the ordinary view (see I. C. A., p. 32), amounts to—'this people' would not be likely to misapply such a word; while the theory of Roorda, Del., and Kay, that the court party accused Isaiah and his friends of having conspired (comp. Am. vii. 10), is refuted by the simple observation already made above, that not the opponents, but the disciples of Isaiah are the persons here addressed.

come—shew himself as (so often, e.g., 1 Sam. iv. 9). Alt. rend. is against the connection, and if sanctuary—asylum, against usage.

<sup>16</sup> Mind thou up . . .] 'But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book to the time of the end,' Dan. xii. 4, comp. viii. 26. This parallel passage shews who the speaker is, viz., Jehovah, who enjoins the prophet not to trust so important an oracle to the memory alone, but to write it down (this is implied as in Dan. i. c.), and lay it up, carefully bound and sealed, among his disciples (comp. xxx. 8). So already the Targum. 'Jehovah's disciples' are of course Isaiah's disciples, whose relation to the highest of teachers has been already recognised by the plural form of the address in v. 12; comp. liv. 13.—The admonition] The word rendered 'to testify,' 'admonish,' or 'solemnly declare,' is often used of Jehovah and the prophets, e.g., Ps. l. 7, Deut. viii. 19.—The instruction] i.e., the prophetic teaching or revelation (see on i. 10) referring here to the oracle in vv. 12–15. There is surely nothing to indicate a reference to the Mosaic law: Tōrah has a far wider meaning.

<sup>17</sup> And I will wait . . .] Isaiah is evidently the speaker, but how strangely abrupt is his language! We should at least have expected, 'And as for me I will wait,' &c., and even this would be only a degree less abrupt. Has not a his face from the house of Jacob, and hope in him. <sup>18</sup> Behold I and the children whom Jehovah hath given me are for signs and for omens in Israel from Jehovah Sabaoth who dwelleth on mount Zion. <sup>19</sup> And when they shall say unto you, 'Reverse dropped out between vv. 16 and 17? Considering the unsatisfactory state of the remainder of the chapter, the supposition cannot be called a violent one. An attempt has indeed been made to bridge over vv. 16 and 17 by supposing that the prophet speaks in his own person in both verses (so Kimchi, Drechsler, Del., Perowne). As Dr. Perowne puts it,<sup>1</sup> in the former verse he utters a command, or a petition; in the latter, he declares his own attitude in reference to it. But in either case, it seems impossible to make sense of 'in my disciples.' Were the passage a command of Isaiah, we should expect 'O my disciples!' were it a petition, 'in the hearts of my disciples' (comp. li. 7, Prov. vii. 3). Del., indeed, supposes the latter to be the meaning of the existing text; but it is doubtful whether even the fuller form suggested would admit the desired interpretation.

<sup>18</sup> Isaiah confirms his faith by the thought that he and his children are divinely appointed.—Signs and omens] The meaning is plain from Ezek. xii. 11, 'Say, I am your omen; like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them; they shall remove and go into captivity;' and from Zech. iii. 8, where the high-priest Joshua and his fellows are called 'men of omen.' The conception is, that God selects certain men to be shadows or types of still greater men or things to come. By the prophetic announcements of their birth, and by their divinely appointed significant names (nomen omen), the two children of Isaiah, like those of Hosea, were living prophecies: and so, too, by his steadfast faith, by his symbolic acts (see on xx. 3), and perhaps by circumstances in his life not known to us, was Isaiah himself.<sup>2</sup> The last words of the verse evidently close a section, and confirm the impression that the preceding passage is incomplete.

<sup>19</sup> The prophet warns his disciples not to give way to the solicitations of the soothsaying party. The apodosis, however, is wanting. Either it has been lost, or, like Paul on similar occasions, the prophet breaks off from inner excitement. From the beginning of the sentence, 'And when they shall say unto you,' we may infer that he meant to conclude with something like 'Hearken not unto them.' See on v. 20.

—Resort to the necromancers . . .] Magic and necromancy seem to have been specially prevalent in S. Israel. The various kinds are named in Deut. xviii. 10, 11. A vivid picture of a necromantic consultation is given in 1 Sam. xxviii. 1-20.—That chirp and that mutter] i.e., that imitate the 'squeaking and gibbering' of ghosts; comp. xxix. 4; II. xxiii. 101; Æn. vi. 492; Tylor, Primitive Culture, i. 408. 'Chirping' reminds us first of all of birds, and in the Babylonian Legend of Ishtar (line 10) the spirits are compared to birds.<sup>3</sup> It may also allude to the voice of children, and H. Spencer quotes a passage about the Zulu diviners, 'The voice (of the supposed spirits) was like that of a very little child.' According to Sept., the phrase is descriptive of ventriloquism (as if obh = 'bottle'), 'Read Captain Lyons' account of the scene in the cabin with the Esquimaux bladder or conjurer; it is impossible not to be reminded of the Witch of Endor' (Coleridge). —Should not people resort to their God ?] This and the following words seem to me a parenthetical remark of the prophet, half serious, half ironical. To take them as a reply suggested for Isaiah's disciples is surely rather forced ; they sound more like the words of an interested bystander. 'Their God,' i.e., the national God, Jehovah (comp. Mic. iv. 5). Formerly (see crit. note) I explained Elohim of the spirits of the dead (comp. 1 Sam. xxviii. 19), as if the people naively exposed the absurdity of their own conduct. Plausible ; but would the shades be called the Elohim of a people ? 'The dead' does not here mean idol-gods (as Ps. cvi. 28), but the spirits of the dead (see Deut. xviii. 11).

<sup>20</sup> To the instruction . . .] i.e., Let us rather edify ourselves by the true oracle laid up in our midst (v. 16). In form the words remind us of Judg. vii. 18, 'To Jehovah and to Gideon !'—Surely they shall speak . . .] 'The general import of this and the following verses cannot be mistaken ; but the language is so compressed and elliptical that it is not easy to make out the meaning and connection of several of the clauses . . . The second clause admits of two legitimate renderings : If they speak not thus, or, Surely they shall speak thus. The objection to the former rendering is that the prophet had already supposed them to speak quite otherwise (v. 19) . . . The latter is therefore much more appropriate. The time will come when even they who had once despised the law and the testimony shall turn to it in despair' (Dr. Weir). Compare for the use of the relative pronoun for the relative adverb 'when,' Lev. iv. 22, Num. v. 29, 1 Kings viii. 33, 38 ; and for the sentiment, Ps. cvii. 11–14, lxxviii. 34. But though the former despisers of revelation turn to it now in despair, it does not follow that their appeal to Jehovah is in vain. We might, indeed, expect that it would be so, comp. xxviii. 19, Am. viii. 11, 12 ; but ix. 1, 2 tells a different tale.—Dawning] = hope of better days, comp. lix. 9, 10.—For them] Lit., for him.

It involves, no doubt, a transposition, but this is no novelty in critical editions of ancient texts; for other instances of misplaced verses, see on xxxviii. 22. Dr. C. Taylor's ingenious theory<sup>1</sup> (partly anticipated by A. E.), that vv. 21, 22 are a continuation of vv. 7, 8, and describe the fate of the Assyrian invaders (vv. 9-20 being a digression suggested by the words Immanu El), must, I almost fear, be rejected, because the picture in vv. 21, 22 is so much more suitable to a people suffering from invasion than to the invaders, and because it so evidently contrasts with the vision of light in chap. ix. 1, 2.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>22,21</sup> The unfortunate Jews look first downward to the earth, and then upward to heaven. No cheering sight meets them below; we are not yet told what vision meets their eyes when they turn them towards heaven. (See crit. note).—And he shall look. . . ] viz., the people personified. 'King' and 'god' may either be taken as synonymous (as And v. 26, Hebr., comp. Ps. v. 2), or as meaning respectively the earthly and the heavenly ruler.

<sup>2</sup> I do not argue against Dr. Taylor on the ground of the length of the digression. There seem to be several instances of insertions being made by the prophetic writers themselves, owing to after-thoughts. Take, e.g., xlii. 1-7. As Duhm has pointed out, xlii. 8 fits on much better to the end of chap. xli. than to the verse which now precedes it. Dr. Taylor will observe that I have spoken above with some hesitation. I wish to allow room for the possibility that a passage has fallen out of the text, before v. 21, which accounted for and led up to the description of the Assyrians (ex hypo.) in vv. 21, 22.

CHAPTER IX.

Vv. 1-7. The conclusion of the prophecy. The mystery in the dealings of Jehovah with His people shall be cleared up. The light of His favour shall return, and those parts of the land of Israel which bore the first brunt of Assyrian hostility shall be proportionately glorified. For the Messiah shall appear, and bring the tyranny of Israel's foes to an end. Under him the empire of David shall be restored on an indestructible foundation.—The tenses in the Hebr. are 'factive,' or perhaps prophetic perfects.

was affliction. At the former time he brought shame on the land of Zebulun and on the land of Naphtali, but in the latter he hath brought honour on the way by the sea, the other side of Jordan, the district of the nations. <sup>2</sup> The people that walk in darkness see a great light; they that dwell in the land of deadly shade, light shineth brilliantly upon them. <sup>3</sup> Thou hast multiplied <sup>a</sup> exultation, thou hast increased joy: <sup>a</sup> they rejoice before thee as with the joy in the harvest, as men exult when they divide spoil. <sup>4</sup> For the yoke of his burden, and the staff of his back, the rod of his task-master, thou

The clouds are lifted, and a brilliant day dawns suddenly (as in lx. 1). 'To her,' i.e., to Palestine, where a hard-pressed remnant of Israelites has been 'walking in darkness.'—The land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali i.e., the later Upper and Lower Galilee. These were the districts despoiled by Tiglath-Pileser, 2 Kings xv. 29, comp. Zech. x. 10. Isaiah does not mean that these parts shall enjoy more prosperity than others, but that the contrast between the past and the present shall be greater in their case than in others. All Israel shall rejoice, but those parts which have suffered longest shall rejoice most.—The way by the sea i.e., the district on the W. of the Sea of Galilee, as opposed to 'the other side of Jordan,' and the 'circle of the nations,' i.e. the frontier districts nearest to Phœnicia, including 'the land of Cabul' (1 Kings ix. 11-13), which formed part of the later Upper Galilee. Via Maris, M. Renan observes, was the name of the high road from Acre to Damascus, as late as the Crusades. 'Way,' however, here means region, comp. lviii. 12, Job xxiv. 4; 'the sea' is the Sea of Galilee (John vi. 1), called the Sea of Kinnereth in Num. xxxiv. 11.

Hades (Ps. xxiii. 4, Job xxxviii. 17, see crit. note). There is no need here (as in some places) to weaken the sense into 'obscurity'; comp. passages like Ps. lxxxviii. 4-6. A night like that of Hades is followed by a blissful dawn (nôgah, see on lxii. 1), somewhat as Ps. xlix. 17.

Midian] 'Day' = battle, whether this lasts one day or more, as frequently in Arabic. Comp. x. 17.

<sup>a</sup> Isaiah wishes to describe the permanence of Israel's redemption. As long as war exists, there must be conquest and slavery. Hence war must be destroyed; the very emblems of war broken for ever (comp. Milton, 'Ode on the Nativity'). So Zech. ix. 10, Ezek. xxxix. 9, Ps. xlv. 9 (10), lxxvi. 3 (?), where, however, the emblems mentioned are the various weapons, whereas here we have the military boot and cloak. The selection is a happy one, as it lends itself to a strikingly picturesque contrast. We are shown first the warrior stalking along in his blood-stained cloak and boots well set with nails, and seeming to shake the earth with his sounding tread; then both cloak and boots supplying fuel for a bonfire. Homeric vigour and simplicity.—With noise] Lit., with shaking; comp. Jer. viii. 16.—Rolled in blood] Sometimes explained as a metaphor, crimson being the colour of the military cloak, comp. Nah. ii. 4, Matt. xxvii. 28. But it is better taken literally. The prophets do not mince their language in depicting Israel's enemies, comp. lxiii. 2, 3, Rev. xix. 13.

<sup>c</sup> A further security for the permanence of the redemption. A prince of a new 'order' has arisen, with supernatural qualities and privileges.—A child is born unto us] We must not separate this passage from the context, and infer that the Messiah had, according to the prophet, already been born at the date of the delivery or writing down of this discourse. The prophet is unrolling a picture of the future, and each part of it is introduced with a 'factitive' perfect tense. He is designedly vague;

the word rendered 'child' (yelled), will serve equally well for a newborn infant (Ex. i. 17, ii. 3, 6), and for a youth or young man (Gen. xlii. 22). It is, therefore, quite uncertain what interval is to elapse between the birth of the child and his public manifestation as the Messiah. We are not told anything about his origin; it is only an inference that he was expected to come from the Davidic family. The prophet is entirely absorbed in his wonderful character and achievements.—The government] Not that of Israel and Judah alone but, as the parallel passage Mic. v. 3-5 shows, that of the world. A small world, it may be said, was the orbis Hebraïis notus, but probably it did not seem such to Isaiah: 'conosciuto il mondo Non cresce, anzi si scema' (Leopardi).—Upon his back] Government being regarded as a burden—comp. vizier (westr) = burdened. See xxii. 22. And his name is called] If we took this literally, we might compare the not unfrequent practice of Assyrian kings of bearing two names (Smith, Assurbanipal, p. 323). But of course Isaiah merely wishes to describe the character of the ideal king, name and character standing in such close relation in the Oriental mind; other examples occur in i. 26, vii. 14 (probably), lx. 14, Jer. xi. 16, xxiii. 6, Ezek. xlviii. 35. The length of the name in the present instance may be intended to suggest the extraordinary character of its bearer. It reminds us of the long honorific names of Egyptian kings (e.g., in the Treaty of Peace, R. P., iv. 27, where the royal titles of Rameses II. take up six lines).—As to the exegesis of the details, three views have a special claim to be mentioned. Luzzatto, a great Jewish scholar (died 1865), puts the name of the Child born unto us, a son is given unto us, and the government resteth upon his back, and his name is called, Wonder-Coun-

into a sentence, and renders 'De-creta prodigi Iddio potente, il sempre padre, il signor della pace.' This is, at least, plausible. It can be supported by the analogy of many (short) Hebrew names (see my 'Index of Proper Names, with Explanations,' in Eyre & Spottiswoode's Variorum Teacher's Bible), and of the Assyrian and Babylonian royal names, nine out of ten of which form a complete sentence, though none so long a one as this. But the meaning which it gives is unnatural. If the intention is to emphasise the Divine wisdom, why accumulate epithets of God which do not contribute to that object? And, above all, why employ the participle instead of the usual verbal form, viz., the imperfect or perfect? But Luzzatto is right on one important point, viz., that all which follows the words 'And his name is called,' constitutes (virtually) a single name (though not, as he wrongly represents it, a complete sentence). Del., though very instructive on other points, seems to me less convincing on this. He thinks (with the older commentators) that the Messiah here receives not merely one but five names, 'Wonder, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace,' thus avoiding the necessity of supposing what he calls (and with justice as against Luzzatto's sentence-theory) a 'sesquipedalian' name; and he justifies such a name as 'Wonder' by the reply of the Angel of Jehovah to Manoah in Judg. xiii. 18—a rather doubtful argument, however, since the Angel does not say that his name is 'Wonderful,' but actually refuses to tell it, 'seeing that it is wonderful' (i.e., unspeakable). Two considerations, however, seem to me conclusive against Del., (1) that Isaiah leads us to expect a name, and not names; and (2) that the several titles are arranged in a significant order (see below).—It is more reasonable to hold, with Ewald, that we have here 'two pairs of compound names united, describing the character of the Messiah first from within and then from without' (J. C. A., p. 33). Thus, 'Wonderful-Counsellor' is parallel to 'Everlasting-Father'; both titles describe what the Messiah is at home. 'God the Hero' is parallel to 'Prince of Peace'; both titles express the ability of the Messiah in working out his plans beyond the limits of his hereditary state.—Wonder-Counsellor i.e., either 'one who deviseth things which are wonderful' (for the idiom, comp. xxii. 2 Hebr.), or 'wonder of a counsellor' (idiom as 'wild ass of a man,' Gen. xvi. 12). The latter meaning is at once linguistically the more obvious (the natural Hebr. equivalent of the former will be found in xxviii. 29, Del.), and much the more forcible. 'Wonder-Counsellor' = one who as a counsellor is entirely wonderful (more strictly, exceptional, supernatural). Any king might be called a counsellor, a man of practical counsel, but here is one whose political sagacity is a phenomenon which can neither be described nor comprehended. ('Wonder' is a word specially used with reference to the Divine, see Judg. xiii. 18, Ex. xv. 11, Ps. lxxvii. 11, lxxviii. 11; and comp. Isa. xxix. 14). Isaiah has a strong sense of the importance of this quality in a ruler; in his second sketch of the Messiah he again lays the chief stress on his supernatural 'wisdom and understanding' (xi. 2)—God the Mighty One 'Mighty,' that is, against His enemies (xlii. 13). The meaning of the phrase is defined by x. 21, where it occurs again of Jehovah. It would be uncritical to infer that Isaiah held the metaphysical oneness of the Messiah with Jehovah, but he evidently does conceive of the Messiah, somewhat as the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Babylonians regarded their kings, as an earthly representation of Divinity

(see on xiv. 13, 14). No doubt this development of the Messianic doctrine was accelerated by contact with foreign nations ; still it is in harmony with fundamental Biblical ideas and expressions. This particular title of the Messiah is no doubt unique. But if even a Davidic king may be described as 'sitting upon the throne of Jehovah' (1 Chr. xxix. 23), and the Davidic family be said, in a predictive passage it is true, to be 'as God (elōhim), as the (or, an) angel of Jehovah' (Zech. xii. 8),<sup>1</sup> much more may similar titles be applied to the Messiah. The last comparison would, indeed, be especially suitable to the Messiah, and it is a little strange that we do not find it. But we do find the Messiah, in a well-known Psalm, invited to sit at the right hand of Jehovah<sup>2</sup> (Ps. cx. 1), and it is only a step further to give him the express title, 'God the Mighty One.' It is no doubt a very great title. The word selected for 'God' is not elōhim, which is applied to the judicial authority (Ex. xxi. 6, xxii. 8), to Moses (Ex. vii. 1), and to the apparition of Samuel (1 Sam. xxviii. 13) ; but el, which whenever it denotes (as it generally does, and in Isaiah always), Divinity, does so in an absolute sense :—it is never used hyperbolically or metaphorically. There is very little, I think, to be said for the other renderings of the phrase ;—the notes of Drechsler and Knobel may be consulted.—Everlasting Father] 'Father,' because the Messiah will rule in a fatherly manner. Job was 'a father to the poor' (Job xxix. 16) ; Eliakim is to be 'a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem' (xxii. 21). 'Everlasting,' because one who is in such close relation with Jehovah must be, like Jehovah (lvii. 15), everlasting. Among the titles of Rameses II. (referred to above), is this—'endowed with life eternal and for ever' (Goodwin's translation), and a loyal Israelite's cry was 'Let the king live for ever.' Much more, thinks the prophet, can this be said of Jehovah's chosen one. Were the Messiah to cease to be, how could the Lord's people maintain its ground ? Through the Messiah's posterity ? But his posterity might degenerate.—This view is not only in itself the worthiest, but also required by the parallelism (see above). Dathe's explanation, 'possessor of the attribute of eternity,' is based on a purely Arabic idiom (see Ewald, Lehrbuch der hebr. Sprache, § 273 b). Hitzig's and Knobel's 'winner, or distributor, of booty,' is against the parallelism, and out of harmony with the religious character of the passage. Surely the spoil of the enemies of Jehovah would have been made a khērem, and been destroyed (comp. 1 Sam. xv.).—Prince of Peace] Comp. Mic. v. 5, 'And this man shall be Peace ;' Zech. ix. 10, 'he shall speak peace to the nations.' Such is the prophetic ideal of Israelitish royalty, in striking contrast to the false ideal represented by Assyria.

<sup>2</sup> This is, I am aware, not the explanation which has become traditional among liberal critics. But even on the view that the Davidic king is referred to, the passage retains its illustrative value. For if the king could be so addressed, much more could the Messiah. A reference to some Maccabean prince (priest and king in one) seems excluded by the 'oracle of Jehovah,' which opens the psalm. For the writers of those late periods painfully felt the want of prophetic revelations (see 1 Macc. xiv. 41).

upon the throne of David and throughout his kingdom, in establishing and supporting it by justice and by righteousness from henceforth even for ever. The jealousy of Jehovah Sabáoth will perform this.

<sup>8</sup> Jehovah hath sent a word into Jacob, and it hath fallen tension and peaceful establishment of the Davidic kingdom. The second member of the verse is logically as well as rhythmically parallel to the first. The throne of David is the seat of the 'government' (v. 6), and his kingdom is the scene of the 'endless peace.' Ewald's rendering, 'on behalf of David's throne,' &c., is therefore less suitable. The mention of David seems to imply that the Messiah was to be one of that king's descendants.—From henceforth even for ever] Two meanings are exegetically possible (I. C. A., p. 34): 1. that the Messiah shall live an immortal life on earth, and, 2. that there shall be an uninterrupted succession of princes of his house. The latter is favoured by 2 Sam. vii. 12-16; comp. Ps. xxi. 4, lxi. 6, 7; but the former seems to me more in accordance with the general tenor of the description. See on 'Everlasting Father,' v. 6.—The jealousy . . .] Jealousy is the affectional manifestation of the Divine holiness. The holiness of Jehovah, and His exclusive right to objects which have been consecrated to his service, is maintained, in Biblical language, by the Divine 'jealousy.' Holiness and jealousy are co-ordinate terms. Hence Josh. xxiv. 19, 'He (Jehovah) is an all-holy God; he is a jealous God'; hence, too, the name of Jehovah can be said to be 'Jealous'; Ex. xxxiv. 14. See Oehler, Old Test. Theology, i. 165-8.

IX. 8-x. 4. An unusually artistic prophecy, the four stanzas, or strophes, of which are not only equal in length, but marked by the recurrence of the refrain in vv. 12, 17, 21 (comp. Psalms xlii., xliii.). It announces a judgment on the whole of Israel, but especially on the northern kingdom. There is a question whether the past tenses in the first three strophes are entirely historical (Ew.), or partly historical, partly prophetic (Hitz., Knob., Del.). 'The prophet places himself,' remarks Del., 'at a time when judgment upon judgment has passed upon all Israel, without producing any amendment. . . How much or how little of what the prophet surveys from his "ideal" position has really taken place, cannot be determined.' Ewald's view, adopted in I. C. A., still seems to me the more probable one, as it is certainly the more consistent. The change from the past to the future seems to me clearly indicated by the form of expression in x. 3, 4. Ewald is further of opinion that ix. 8-x. 4 originally came between v. 25 and v. 26-30. To this also I must still adhere. No one can accuse this view of audacity who recollects how frequently passages in manuscripts are misplaced. The scribe left out something by accident (e.g., xxxviii. 21, 22), could not afford to rewrite his work, and so put in the missing passage at the most convenient place.—In I. C. A., p. 5, I have shown cause for dating ix. 8-x. 4 earlier than chaps. ii.-v., viz. in the reign of Jotham (see on v. 21). Probably ix. 8-x. 4 was written first, then ii. 2-v. 24 was put into its final shape, and connected with the independent prophecy, ix. 8, &c., by means of v. 25, whilst v. 26-30 were added last of all (note the reference to Assyria) to form a suitable conclusion to the whole volume.

Sun-dried bricks were probably then as now the common material of houses in Palestine (comp. Job iv. 19), 'hewn stones' being reserved for kings and nobles (comp. 1 Kings vii. 9, Am. v. 11).—[Sycamores] The commonest tree in the lowlands of Palestine, still much used in building.—[Cedars] Purchased at a great price from the Phœnicians (comp. 1 Kings x. 27).

pressive of prophetic confidence.—Exalted] i.e., placed in a position of superiority, as Ps. xx. 1 (2).—Against him] viz. Israel. Hence, 'who smote him,' v. 13.—The princes of Rezin] The text-reading fails to make sense. It can only mean the Assyrians (comp. 2 Kings xvi. 9), but the next verse makes it clear that the prophet refers rather to the Syrians. Besides, we want something in the first clause nearly equivalent to 'his (Israel's, not Rezin's) enemies' in the second.

<sup>12</sup> Aram before . . .] Knobel infers that the Syrians and Philistines were compelled by Tiglath-Pileser, immediately after being conquered, to furnish auxiliaries for his expedition against Israel. But this, as Diestel observes, is extremely improbable, and does not agree with the statement that the attack proceeds from the east and west. Delitzsch, with a keener sense of the connection, finds here a prediction of injuries to N. Israel from Syria, and to Judah from the Philistines. But he still ascribes the impulse in the former case to Assyria, in order to explain 'the adversaries of Rezin.' It is surely more natural to assign the prophecy to which this passage belongs to the period preceding the league of Rezin and Pekah. Rezin's policy was to force first Israel and then Judah into alliance with him against Assyria. Israel and Judah both resisted; the resistance of the former has found its only permanent record in Isaiah. The Philistines had the double stimulus devoured Israel with open mouth. In spite of all this, his anger turned not away, and his hand was stretched out still. —<sup>13</sup> But the people turned not unto him who smote him, and unto Jehovah Sabaoth they did not resort. <sup>14</sup> So Jehovah cut off from Israel head and tail, palm-branch and rush, in one day. <sup>15</sup> [The elder and the honourable, he is the head; and the prophet who teacheth lies, he is the tail.] <sup>16</sup> And the guides of this people became misleading, and its guided ones lost men. <sup>17</sup> Therefore Jehovah <sup>b</sup> spared not <sup>b</sup> its young men, and upon its orphans and its widows he had no compassion, for everyone was profane, and an evil-doer, and every mouth was speaking profanity. In spite of all this his anger turned not away, and his hand was stretched out still.

<sup>14</sup> Palm-branch and rush] A proverbial expression = high and low (LXX. has μέγαν καὶ μικρόν); comp. xix. 15. The palm-branch receives its name in Hebr. (lit. palm of the hand) from its upward bend. The rush is an emblem of humiliation: lviii. 5.

<sup>15</sup> It is difficult to defend the genuineness of this verse. The false prophets, being leaders of the people, ought to belong to the 'head.' Besides, the verse makes the stanza or strophe too long by a verse. Hence most critics since Koppe have included it in the list of intrusive marginal glosses. I admit that there is a certain humour in the passage (Del. compares blande caudam jactare popello, Persius); it is not a sotte glose (Reuss) but simply unsuitable to the context. The natural explanation of the figures in v. 14 is given in v. 16;

As no class is free from the infection of anarchy, so none can escape its natural and self-developed as well as divinely-willed punishment. The lawlessness of the one punishes the lawlessness of the other. There is

X. 1. The last strophe, or stanza, chastises the tyranny of corrupt officials. Here, as it seems, the prophet has the condition of Judah principally in mind. The transition seems to us abrupt, but its possibility is established by viii. 6–14 and xxviii. 1–6. The division between north and south was, in fact, not recognised by the prophets of Isaiah's age. <sup>3</sup> Except he crouch . . . ] The answer to the question in v. 3. This is the only place where the Jewish nobles can hide their head or deposit their glory. Alt. rend. is the only other possible one of the text as it stands. They must either accept captivity in a crowded prison, or fall by an indiscriminate massacre (comp. xiv. 19). The text-reading is certainly difficult, but not ungrammatical, and not inconsistent with Isaiah's style and thought. Lagarde's conjecture, brilliant as it is, is inferior in suitability. See crit. note.

CHAPTER X. 5—XII. 6.

THIS, as Ewald remarks, is the first discourse of Isaiah's aimed directly and solely against the Assyrians. To the people of Judah it is almost entirely favourable; once only (x. 22) does the prophet glance at the terrible fate of unbelieving Jews. It falls into two parts, the one (x. 5-34) describing the moral and spiritual antecedents of the Assyrian invasion (from which—see on v. 22—the Judahites are already suffering, and the great overthrow reserved for the foe); the other (xi. 1-xii. 6), the blessed state of Israel and the world under the Messianic king, when all shall recognise one standard of spiritual morality, when the scattered members of the nation, and even distant peoples, shall gather to Jerusalem as the centre of religious unity. Two bursts of lyric song, put into the mouths of the reunited nation, close the prophecy. (1)

There are several remarkable points of contact between this prophecy and chaps. xxviii. and xxix.: comp. x. 12 with xxviii. 21; x. 22 with xxviii. 22; x. 26 with xxviii. 15, 18; x. 33 with xxix. 7, 8; xi. 2 with xxviii. 6. From this Ewald infers that chaps. x. xi. (chap. xii., he thinks, must have been written by one of those 'redeemed' from the great exile) were composed not long after those chapters. Samaria must at any rate have fallen in the interval. So, at least, thinks Ewald on the ground of x. 9. Delitzsch, however, is of opinion that the prophet is speaking from his 'watch-tower' (xxi. 6), and gives his intuitions the form of history. He knows that Samaria is doomed; he knows how Sennacherib will speak after her fall; he knows that a hostile army will march upon Jerusalem; and in vv. 28-32 gives an imaginative representation of the line of the Assyrian march. So far as this last point is concerned, Ewald is at one with Delitzsch. 'It is clear,' he says, 'from the context that Yesaya is here describing [Sennacherib's] future march as his imagination depicts it; the perfect tense prevails merely to produce greater vividness of description.' Both scholars are also agreed that the invasion, when it came, was not actually made from the quarter described by the prophet. Prof. Robertson Smith follows Ewald, and thinks that the invader was made to come from the north to make the imaginary picture more effective.<sup>1</sup>

X In spite of these and most other recent critics, I must agree with Sayce, Brandes, and Kleinert that Sargon and not Sennacherib is the invader of the prophecy, and that the line of advance described corresponds to fact. That Isaiah's expectations pointed to the former is unquestionable, as the conquests referred to in v. 9 as recent, were effected by Sargon. It is of course quite possible that these expectations were unrealised. Just as Esar-haddon and not Sargon fulfilled the prophecy in chap. xix., so Sennacherib, instead of Sargon, may have carried out the Divine purpose by invading Judah. If, however, we could render it probable that Sargon invaded as well as Sennacherib, we should, I think, find it easier to explain a group of Isaiah's prophecies (chap. xxix.-xxxii., chap. x. 5-xi. 16, chap. xxii. and chap. i.), and to account for the fragmentary and, as they stand, inconsistent traditions put together in chaps. xxxvi.-xxxix. It seems that we can do so; the documentary evidence may be scanty, still it exists, and there is good reason to suppose that it once existed in larger abundance. We know from the cylinder inscription found at Kouyunjik, and referred to on chap. xx., that Judah was a member of the coalition which included Yavan, king of Ashdod, who was so severely punished by Sargon. Unfortunately this cylinder is broken, so that the history of Sargon's vengeance of Judah cannot be presented in detail. It is certain, however, that in another inscription Sargon calls himself the conqueror of Judah: his words are, musacnis mat-Yahudu sa asarsu ru'uku, 'the subduer of the land of Judah whose situation is remote.'<sup>2</sup>

Dr. Schrader in 1876 accepted the fact of Sargon's invasion of Judah, and welcomed it as throwing a bright light on the confused narrative of 2 Kings xviii. (Isa. xxxvii.). 'That Sargon,' he said, 'in his campaign against Egypt, in which he penetrated as far as Raphia on the Egyptian frontier, should not have also touched Judah, is à priori quite inconceivable, and the contrary is expressly ratified by an inscription of Sargon.'<sup>3</sup> In his new edition of K. A. T., however, he takes up a different position, and apparently treats the statement of Sargon's inscription as an empty boast, forgetting that Sargon is not arrogant and boastful like Sennacherib, and does not claim to have done what he had not.

I shall have to return to the subject when treating of chaps. xxxvi.-xxxix., and again in the first of the essays in vol. ii. Suffice it to have recorded Schrader's former endorsement of the new view: second thoughts are not always best. Prof. Robertson Smith's opposition is dictated by his chronological theory, in which he mainly follows Wellhausen. The objections expressed by him in The Prophets of Israel have been mostly answered elsewhere. But with regard (1) to the non-mention of any conquest of Judah in the Annals of Sargon, I may reply here that these annals cannot claim to be exhaustive, and that the portion for 711 seems to be little more than an extract from an eponym list, where only the chief object of the year's campaign is recorded. And (2), as to the absence of any direct mention of the invasion of Sargon in the Book of Kings; the written traditions of the Jews have come down to us in such a fragmentary state (thanks to the catastrophe of the Exile), that hardly any omission can much surprise us. Is there any reason to doubt whether Sargon captured Samaria, because the Book of Kings is silent upon the fact? We may well be thankful for the supplementary and corrective uses of the Assyrian inscriptions, and not least as students of the prophecies of Isaiah. And if it be objected that the inscriptions have in this case only led us to a highly probable result, I reply that this is all that we can generally attain to in dating the products of Hebrew literature. But even a probable result is better than none at all. A prophecy like that before us is a historical document, and must be dated in order to be understood.

<sup>5</sup> The rod of mine anger. . . ] i.e., Assyria is but the instrument of the Divine purposes. So in Jer. li. 20 (comp. i. 23), Babylon is addressed as God's 'hammer.' On the end of the verse see crit. note.

<sup>6</sup> Am I wont to despatch him] This rendering implies that the impious nation and the people of my wrath refer to any and every nation of this description; alt. rends., that either Israel is intended alone, or Israel and Judah together.

<sup>7</sup> Not so doth he plan] His whole thought is bent on enlarging his own empire, without regard to the purposes of Jehovah. For Jehovah, according to the Old Testament, punishes even unwitting violations of his rights (comp. 2 Sam. vi. 7).

tries. He has two good reasons for feeling sure of victory: 1. his very officers are kings—his might is therefore tenfold that of Hezekiah; and 2. he has already captured cities as important as Jerusalem.—[Princes] As in Jer. xxxviii. 17, xxxix. 3.—Dr. Weir compares this boastful speech with the vaunts of Tiglath-Pileser I (R. P., v. 5-26).

<sup>9</sup> Is not Calno as Carchemish? ] The fate of both populations was deportation, Calno being captured in 738, Carchemish in 717 (comp. Smith, Assyria, pp. 79, 97). There is a close parallel in a contemporary prophet—'Pass ye over to Calneh, and see; and thence go ye to Great Hamath, and go down to Philistian Gath; are ye better than those kingdoms? or is your border greater than their border?'

Hamath as Arpad ? or is not Samaria as Damascus ? <sup>10</sup> As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the not-gods (and their images did exceed those of Jerusalem <sup>d</sup>), <sup>11</sup> can I not, as I have done to Samaria and her not-gods, so do to Jerusalem and her images ?'

(Am. vi. 2, following Geiger). Comp. also xxxvi. 19, xxxvii. 13.—[Calne] the more correct form, or Calneh (Sept. Χαλάνη), one of the four cities of Nimrod, is Kulunu or Zirgulla (modern Zerghul), one of the necropolises of Chaldea, 'on the important loop-canal between the two main rivers of Babylonia.' Its mounds have been recently explored by M. de Sarzec.<sup>1</sup>—[Carchemish] It was Mr. G. Smith's last fatal journey which revealed the long-lost site of this great Euphratean emporium (on its name, see Last Words, vol. ii.), which is not at Mabug (Hierapolis), eight or nine miles from the Euphrates, but at Jerábís, or Jirbás (Europos or Oropos), on the right bank of the river.<sup>2</sup>—Important though Carchemish was as a city of the Hittites (the Assyrian Khatti and Egyptian Kheta), it attained still greater prosperity under the Assyrians, especially after the overthrow of Tyre by Sennacherib. How important it was, is shown by the frequent references to the mana (= Heb. maneh) of Gargamis (its Assyrian name) as a standard weight in the commercial cuneiform inscriptions. The Hittites, on a survey of the various evidence, do not appear to have spoken a Semitic tongue (see Sayce, 'The Monuments of the Hittites,' in T. S. B. A., vii. 248-293, and my art. 'Hittites,' in Encycl. Brit., 9th ed.).—[Hamath] The Assyrian Amatu, in early times the capital of the Khavvat or Hivites (?), and still an important city under the name of Hamah. On the hieroglyphic inscriptions found there, see Burton and Drake's Unexplored Syria; Sayce, T. S. B. A., v. 22-32; Rylands, ibid. vii. 429-442. [Arpad] the Assyrian Arpaddu, always coupled in O.T. with Hamath. Its Tell or hill still preserves the name of Erfád; it is about three (German) miles from Aleppo (Z. d. m. G., xxv. 655). Arpad seems to have shared the fate of Hamath in 720 (see Smith's Eponym Canon, p. 127).

<sup>10</sup> We should have expected Isaiah to continue, 'How then shall Jerusalem escape?' But two other related thoughts suggest themselves to his mind: First, that Samaria and Jerusalem are in a special manner parallel; and secondly, that Sargon might well represent the idols which, according to him, they worshipped as inferior in number and importance to those of the other nations.—[The kingdoms of the not-gods] This would certainly be strange in the mouth of Sargon, however appropriate in that of Isaiah. An Assyrian king would not have denied that the gods of other nations had any existence at all; he only regarded it as his mission to reduce them to subjection to the supreme god Asshur. The destruction of weaker states involved, to him, the humiliation of as many rival deities. Sargon carries away captive the gods of the king of Ashdod. Esar-haddon improves upon this. He takes away the gods of the Arabs, inscribes the idols with the praises of Asshur, and then returns them to their original owners.—[Their images] Sargon throws in Jehovah together with the 'heaps' (lvii. 13) of adopted deities. He also confounds the worship of Jehovah under a symbol, prevalent in Israel, with the imageless religion maintained by Isaiah and Hezekiah.—~~Did exceed~~] In Phœnicia, as in Assyria and Babylonia, each canton and even town had its own variety of cult (Baal-Çor, Baal-Haçor, &c.). In Israel and Judah the same localising tendency existed; it was derived from the Canaanites. But the influence of the simpler religion of Jehovah must have checked its progress, even in Israel, but especially in Judah. Yet even in Judah, we find Isaiah complaining that 'their land has become full of not-gods' (ii. 8), and Jeremiah—before the Reformation of Josiah—that 'the gods of Judah are become as many as her cities' (ii. 28; comp. xi. 13). Perhaps the Sargon of Isaiah means that the idols of the other nations were superior, partly in numbers, partly in importance. A bitter insult, whether it exactly corresponded to fact, or not!—On the word rendered 'images,' see Smith's Bibl. Dic., art. 'Idolatry.'

<sup>12</sup> And it shall come to pass: when the Lord shall have finished all his work on mount Zion and in Jerusalem, I will hold visitation on the fruit of the arrogance of the king of Assyria and on the vainglory of the haughtiness of his eyes.

<sup>12</sup> But the turning-point is coming. As soon as Judah has been chastised sufficiently, Jehovah will throw the 'rod' away, and take notice of these defiant words.—~~Shall have finished~~] Lit cut off (same word

For the latter, see Ps. lxxviii. 25, 'bread of Mighty Ones,' i.e. celestial beings; LXX., angels. The latter seems to me now more in accordance with the style of the Assyrian royal inscriptions (see, e.g., Records of the Past, v. 17). Abbir, Abtir, and Addir are all divine epithets in Hebrew (the last-named also in Phœnician), and capable of being used as synonyms for Elohim.—~~Mine hand reached~~] Precisely this language is used by

His briars and his thorns] Comp. ix. 18. Not the common soldiers, as opposed to the stately forest-trees of the leaders (Lowth, Hitz., Ew.); this is too realistic. The serried battalions of Assyria remind the prophet of a forest (comp. Dante, Inferno, iv. 66), and their destruction of a forest-conflagration. The fire first catches hold of the thorns and briars, and then passes to the crowd of stately trees.—In one day] i.e., in one battle (see on ix. 3).

<sup>18</sup> His garden-land] A favourite word of Isaiah's. Hebr. karmel, i.e., land planted with the choicer fruit-bearing trees, such as vines and olives (see crit. note on v. 1).—Both soul and body] An abrupt change of metaphor (comp. i. 6). The remnant of Israel, however, is thoroughly weaned from its false confidences, and returns to the true God.—His smiter] Assyria.—In faithfulness] Or, in steadfastness. See Jer. iv. 1-4.—God the Mighty-One] God who has manifested Himself as the mighty one. They are the words (El Gibbôr) which form the second couple in the compound name of the Messiah. Yet we can hardly venture to take them as an appellation of the Messiah, for it is Jehovah who acts alone throughout this part of the prophecy. Even later on, when the Messiah does appear (xi. 1, &c.), it is with more restricted functions than in ix. 6, 7, where he is not merely the source of happiness for the future, but the author of deliverance from misery (see on ix. 6).

<sup>22</sup> A remnant of them] A remnant certainly, but only a remnant. A phrase of double meaning, such as Isaiah loves (comp. vi. 24).—A final work . . .] Isaiah anticipates the worst for the impenitent.

Indeed, the judgment seems to have begun ; the Assyrians are already in Judah. This phrase, as modified in next verse, recurs in xxviii. 22, Dan. ix. 27 ; comp. xi. 36. Dr. Weir sees nothing in it to hinder him from taking vv. 21-23 as purely consolatory ('a remnant shall certainly return' . . . 'destruction shall be kept within fixed limits,' for which last he compares Job xiv. 5). Luther reached the same result, but by downright mistranslation.

[Midian] (So ix. 3.) Or, as he smote Midian (Naeg.), for all the turning-points in Israel's history are notable signs of the energising of Jehovah. The mention of the rock Oreb as the chief locality is strange (see Judg. vii.), but Isaiah may wish to suggest that the Assyrian army will not only be overthrown, but deprived of its leaders, like the Midianites. There is no sufficient reason for supposing that Isaiah followed a different tradition of the Midianitish defeat (Studer, Wellhausen).—His rod over the sea 'And he shall pass through the sea Affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea Billows' (Zech. x. 11). The Red Sea has become typical. Comp. xi. 15, 16.

<sup>27</sup> Two figures :—Israel as a burden-bearer, and as an animal under the yoke. The last clause is very difficult according to the rec. text. It is surely strange to say that the pressure of the fat of an animal will destroy the yoke. Besides, it is not the yoke of Israel which bursts of itself, but Jehovah who bursts it. Of course, the present reading may be ingeniously defended ; but it is much more probable (judging from the analogy of many corrupt passages) that there is some error in the text. See critical note, vol. ii.

<sup>28-32</sup> It is this passage which led to the rectification of the date of the prophecy (see Introd.). The details are to be taken literally. They are either Isaiah's prophetic anticipations (realised by the event), or his retrospect, and relate to the latter part of Sargon's march against Jerusalem.—Aiath i.e., Ai. ## CHAPTER XI.

COMP. Oracula Sibyll., iii. 766-794, a fine paraphrase of this prophecy, which may possibly in its turn have been imitated by Virgil (unconscious of its Jewish origin) in the famous Fourth Eclogue.

humiliation.—This prophecy supplements the vague predictions in vii. 14-16, ix. 6, 7. It tells us (comp. Mic. v. 2) that the Messiah was to belong to the family of David ; this is all which Isaiah appears to have known. The house of David was large ; there was even 'a sort of secondary royal family'—the house of Nathan (Zech. xii. 12). 'Isaiah might well be uncertain which of the numerous princes who were descended from David was the one chosen by God to be the national regenerator.' <sup>1</sup> There is nothing to indicate that he thought of Hezekiah, or of any of the children of Hezekiah.

shall rest upon him the spirit of Jehovah, a spirit of wisdom and discernment, a spirit of counsel and might, a spirit of knowledge and of the fear of Jehovah. <sup>a</sup> And he shall not judge according to the sight of his eyes, nor arbitrate according to the hearing of his ears, <sup>4</sup> but with righteousness shall he judge the helpless, and arbitrate with equity for the humble in the land, and he shall smite the <sup>b</sup> terrible with the sceptre of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the ungodly. <sup>5</sup> And righteousness shall be the girdle of and Solomon in one, equally great in knowledge and in practice. His qualities are arranged in three pairs, but all spring from one source, 'the Spirit of Jehovah,' which 'rests (permanently) upon him' (comp. xlii. 1). They are (1) moral and intellectual clearness of perception, (2) the wisdom and bravery which befit a ruler (comp. xxxvi. 5), (3) a knowledge of the requirements of Jehovah (see Mic. vi. 8), and the will to act agreeably to this knowledge.

<sup>3</sup> But 'the fear of Jehovah' is nothing if not practical, and the Messiah's royal calling requires him in the first instance to be a judge (comp. Jer. xxi. 12). Hence the prophet continues, He shall not judge . . . ] i.e., the Messiah will not be the sport of appearances, like ordinary kings, nor even require a lengthened investigation. Having 'the spirit of knowledge' from on high, he will 'know what is in man.'

<sup>4</sup> In striking contrast to the corrupt princes of Judah (i. 23, x. 2) he will make the poor, especially the 'poor in spirit,' his chief care. But the terrible, him whom all men dread for his tyrannical behaviour; or, as the next line explains it, 'the ungodly one,' he shall smite, &c. This is exactly parallel to what Isaiah says of the Messianic period (though the King is not there mentioned) in xxix. 19, 20, 'And the humble shall increase their joy in Jehovah . . . because the terrible one has come to nought.' The received reading gives the passage a different and rather less appropriate term. The 'earth' must be the hostile, heathen world, and the 'ungodly' a collective term for its rulers (comp. Ps. cxxv. 3, 'the sceptre of ungodliness'), and the prophet will then allude to the judicial act of vengeance which, down to the time of John the Baptist, was regarded as chronologically the first function of the Messiah.—With the sceptre of his mouth] The whole phrase is remarkable. It brings the King very near divinity, for the creative virtue of the word belongs properly to Jehovah: 'I have slain them,' says Jehovah, 'by the words of my mouth' (Hos. vi. 5). It is also ascribed to the Messiah in Zech. ix. 10, 'He shall speak peace to the nations,' and to the Servant of Jehovah in xlix. 2 (see note). The bearings of this point on the questions as to the nature of the Messiah and of the Servant will be at once evident. There is a tempting appearance of a parallel in Zoroastrianism; but it is a mirage!—the 'word' or 'words' in a remarkable passage of the Avesta (Vendidad, xix. 28–34) are too certainly liturgical symbols. Obs. the Messiah is monarch of the world, though, as Sir E. Strachey truly observes, the idea of the universal kingdom is not so prominent here as in many other places.

his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. <sup>6</sup> And the wolf shall lodge with the lamb, and the leopard lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and there shall be a little child leading them. <sup>7</sup> And the cow and the bear <sup>c</sup>shall graze,<sup>c</sup> together shall their young ones lie down, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox; <sup>8</sup> and the suckling shall play by the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall stretch out his hand on the great viper's <sup>d</sup>den. <sup>9</sup> They shall not <sup>e</sup>harm nor destroy in tice) and faithfulness (i.e., trustworthiness). Does not this passage determine the sense of ἀλήθεια in Eph. vi. 14? The tautology in the repeated girdle displeases Bishop Lowth and Dr. de Lagarde, but Hebrew ears did not mind it; comp. xv. 8, xvi. 7, xvii. 12, 13, li. 8 (Kocher, against Lowth, in 1786).

<sup>6-9</sup> The rest of creation shall sympathise with this reign of virtue and piety. Evil having been eradicated from human society, it would be incongruous that cruelty and rapine should prevail among the lower animals. It is stated as the cause of the Deluge that 'all flesh (i.e., both man and beast) had corrupted its way upon the earth' (Gen. vi. 12). If the sight of the violence and cruelty of man was effectual for the corruption of the original innocence of the beasts and birds, surely the sight of their peace and harmony would be equally potent in its restoration. It is singular that nothing is said here of the products of the earth, which generally furnish such striking features to descriptions like the present. Verses 6, 7, and 9 are repeated in a condensed form in lxx. 25.—Most of the ancients and Calvin take the description allegorically; the rabbis realistically; Hengst. admits a secondary allegorical sense; Naeg., while adhering (and rightly) to the realistic interpretation, takes the details to be simply typical or symbolical of a real elevation of the natural world; Ew. is vague.

<sup>9</sup> They shall not harm . . .] Most of those who adopt alt. rend. assume that the allegorical sense of vv. 6-8 is at least the primary one, and make the verbs in v. 9a refer to the citizens of the Messianic kingdom. They seem to doubt whether wild beasts can be called 'evil,' forgetting Gen. xxxvii. 20. Not only, however, is it more natural to continue the realistic interpretation; but we are almost bound to do so by lxx. 25 (see note). The prophet argues (as suggested above) from the improved condition of the human world that the evil propensities of the lower animals will die out.—In all my holy mountain] i.e., on the slopes of Mount Zion, which will have been wonderfully transformed in accordance with the prophecy in ii. 2, comp. Zech. xiv. 10, Ezek. xl. 2 (Naeg.). Or, in the whole highland-country of Israel, comp. lvii. 13, Ps. lxxviii. 54, Ex. xv. 17 (Hupf., Del.). The first view is the safer; it is by no means certain that 'mountain' in the passages mentioned means the Holy Land.—The next clause shows that the harmlessness of the animals on the holy mountain is only a symbol of 'paradise regained' throughout the whole world.—The earth . . .] Such, and not 'the all my holy mountain, for the earth will have become full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters which cover the sea.

land,' must be the rendering, unless we are prepared to limit 'the sea' to the waters washing the coast of Palestine! In the next verse, too, we have 'peoples' and 'nations.'

<sup>10-16</sup> But the 'restitution of all things' requires some further development on the side of humanity. Hence the details in the following verses. The mention of the earth as a whole in v. 9 suggests to the prophet to begin with the Gentiles.—The root] i.e., the plant springing from the root, as liii. 2, Deut. xxix. 17, Sirach xlvii. 25 (22). There is a special reason for the phrase here; it emphasises the contrast between the outwardly mean origin and the ultimate greatness of the Messiah. For how tall must the plant have grown, to serve as 'a signal to the nations.'—The passage is alluded to in Rev. v. 5, xxii. 16.—Resort] Word specially used of prayer (lv. 6) and of consultation of oracles (viii. 19, xix. 3).—His resting-place] The word is significant. The throne of the Messiah is 'for ever and ever' (ix. 6), like that of Elohim (Ps. xlv. 6).—Shall be glory] viz. the glory of Jehovah, for when Jehovah Sabaoth (whose representative is the Messiah) 'becomes king in mount Zion,' there shall be 'glory before his elders' (xxiv. 23). Comp. iv. 5.

—To purchase] Illustrate by Ex. xv. 16 (xix. 5), Ps. lxxiv. 2, Isa. i. 1, lii. 3.—From Assyria . . .] First the prophet mentions the two greatest of Israel's foes, Assyria and Egypt, or rather Lower Egypt, (Ebers), then Pathros, or South-land (Brugsch), i.e. Upper Egypt, and Cush, i.e. Ethiopia, then Elam (xxii. 6) and Shinar (i.e. the country enclosed by the Euphrates and the Tigris from the points where these rivers approach = Irak-Arabi), then the neighbouring Hamath (see below), and lastly the more distant shores of the Mediterranean Sea. Comp. parallel passage, xxvii. 13. The extent ascribed to the dispersion is certainly surprising. Does Isaiah, we must ask, describe a present or a future state of things? No doubt the calamities of war (especially the fall of the northern kingdom) had brought many Israelites into foreign slavery, and this may be alluded to in Zech. ix. 11-13 (Joel iii. 6 is, I believe, much later). But this affords a very inadequate explanation. Nothing short of a succession of severe judgments, issuing in the almost complete destruction of the Jews as a people, will fully account for the emphatic language of Isaiah. 'Jehovah stretched out his hand a second time':—there must therefore be a correspondence between the first and the second deliverance. The whole people was in Egypt; it must be presumed that the whole people, or so much as will be left from the sword, will be languishing in exile when Jehovah shall again interpose. This implies that a suc-

Pathros and from Cush, and from Elam and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the 'countries of the sea.' <sup>12</sup> And he shall lift up a signal for the nations, and shall gather the outcast of Israel, and collect the dispersed of Judah from the four wings of the earth; <sup>13</sup> and the jealousy of Ephraim shall depart, and the 'adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not be jealous of Judah, and Judah shall not be an adversary to Ephraim.' <sup>14</sup> And they shall pounce upon the shoulder of Philistia towards the west: together shall they spoil the sons of the east; on Edom and Moab shall they cession of sore judgments will have passed over the land of Israel, as the result of which not even 'a tenth part' will be left, and 'great will be the desolate space within the land' (vi. 12). Isaiah, like the prophets in general, idealises the actual circumstances, and 'sees the entire evolution of the kingdom of God compressed into the immediate future' (Drechsler).—

From Elam] Sargon (R. P., ix. 16) states that he transplanted Hittites into Elam; of course he may have treated Israelites so too. But we are not bound to assume this. Jews from Elam or Susiana (lit. 'sons of Elam') appear in the list of returned exiles in Ezra ii. 7.—

From Hamath] Mentioned here because the kingdom of David and of Jeroboam II. extended thus far. Hamath, too, is really quite as far from Jerusalem as Cairo (about ten days' journey, says Mukaddasi). Nöldeke, Z. d. m. G., 1878. And from the countries of the sea]

The only passage in which this technical phrase occurs in the acknowledged prophecies of Isaiah. See on xl. 15, and comp. Last Words, vol. ii.

<sup>12</sup> The raising of the signal is mentioned again, to associate the Israelites with the Gentiles. Hence the true religion will be open to all nations.—The outcast (men). . . the dispersed (women)] A short way of expressing that both sexes will be included.

shall correspond to the outer. The great feud which runs through all Israel's history (comp. ix. 21) between north and south shall come to an end; those who seek to revive it, God 'shall cut off.'—The jealousy of Ephraim] i.e., the jealousy felt towards Ephraim in contrast to 'the adversaries of Judah,' i.e., the Ephraimites. This seems to me now a grammatically easier and therefore more probable explanation than its converse—'jealousy felt by Ephraim' and the 'unquiet ones in Judah.' Obs. the skilful variation in the latter part of the verse. Ephraim, who was the object of jealousy before, now becomes its subject; while Judah, at first the sufferer from Ephraim's hostility, now becomes the foremost in the feud. So Naeg., whose note 'throws great light upon the passage.'

<sup>1</sup> The song of the reunited and restored people, with whom the prophet unites himself in spirit. It is the counterpart of the Song of Moses in Ex. xv.; indeed, v. 26 is adopted from Ex. xv. 2, and v. 5a alludes to the beginning of the song, Ex. xv. 1.

<sup>2</sup> Salvation] The Hebr. y'shu'ah is a pregnant word. The root-meaning is width of space; the derived meaning may be as well 'deliverance' as 'liberty,' or 'a state of happiness' (A.V. Job xxx. 15 'welfare'). In Isaiah, especially in the second part, this latter meaning frequently occurs. The reference, however, is not always the same—sometimes purely temporal blessings, sometimes mixedly temporal and spiritual (comp. σωτήρ in 1 Tim. iv. 10).

CHAPTER XIII.-XIV. 23.

THIS is the first of a series of twelve prophecies (chaps. xiii.-xxiii.) mostly directed against foreign nations. It announces the fall of Babylon, not as an isolated fact in its relations to the Jews only, but as the central event of the 'day of Jehovah.' Its tone is in harmony with the title, extremely rare in the prophetic writings, which it gives to the Divine Judge (El Shaddai, see on v. 6); the softer element, so conspicuous in chaps. xl.-lxvi., is entirely wanting. This remark applies both to the preliminary prophecy in chap. xiii., and to the triumphal Ode on the king of Babylon in chap. xiv. The poetical merits of the latter are, however, so far superior to those of the former, that I have been led to the conjecture (which I hope to defend elsewhere) that the Ode was not originally composed to occupy its present position. However this may be, it is not only a splendid enforcement of the Biblical doctrine of retribution, but supplies most valuable illustrations of the current beliefs—partly of the Jews, partly also of the Babylonians—as to the other world. (With regard to the form of the Ode, see on xiv. 3.)

Sir E. Strachey (with the half-assent of Stanley<sup>1</sup>) has attempted to show that the 'king of Babylon' referred to in the Ode is a king of Assyria (Jewish History and Politics, pp. 166-170), but on insufficient grounds. It is true that Sargon is called 'king of Babylon' by the Babylonians (comp. Lenormant, Les premières civilisations, ii. 253), and that he styles himself 'king of Assyria and viceroy of Babylon;' but this does not render it probable that 'king of Babylon' in the mouth of Isaiah would mean 'king of Assyria'; would any of his readers have understood him? Is not the Ode precisely parallel to the song in chap. xlvii., where no one has yet attempted to make Babylon equivalent to Assyria? (See more against this view on xxxix. 8.)

prefixed more suitable titles; and 2. that the Isaianic authorship is opposed by internal evidence. It does not fall within my scope to discuss the latter point here.—[Utterance] Not 'burden'; 1. because the word is prefixed to at least four passages which are not of a threatening purport (Zech. ix. 1, xii. 1, Prov. xxx. 1, xxxi. 1; comp. Lam. ii. 14); 2. because the rebuke in Jer. xxiii. 33, &c., only yields a good sense if we admit that the prophets were accustomed to apply the word massâ to their prophecies in the sense of oracle or utterance (comp. Hupfeld on Ps. xv. 3).—Ewald divides chap. xiii. into three stanzas or strophes:—I. vv. 2-8; II. vv. 9-16; III. vv. 17-22. This is plausible, but seems to obscure the connection. The subject suggests a single division at v. 14 (see note).

<sup>2</sup> Upon a bare mountain lift ye up a signal, raise the voice unto them, swing the hand, that they may enter the gates of the princes. <sup>3</sup> I, even I, have charged my consecrated ones, I have also called my mighty men to execute mine anger, my proudly triumphant ones. <sup>4</sup> Hark, a tumult in the mountains, like as of much people! hark, the uproar of the kingdoms of nations gathered together! Jehovah Sabáoth is mustering the host of war. <sup>5</sup> They come from a far country, from the end of the heavens, even Jehovah and the weapons of his in-

<sup>2-13</sup> The Divine judgment upon the world.—Upon a bare mountain ['Bare,' i.e. treeless, that the signal may be clearly seen. So Balaam 'went to a bare hill,' to survey the tribes of Israel (Num. xxiii. 3). Obs., the hills of Palestine were not so bare anciently as they are now; hence the writer's particularity.—Lift ye up . . .] A mysterious voice is heard (as in xl. 3-6, lxii. 10), appointing a signal for a distant army (see v. 26). The summons being urgent, it is to be enforced by a ringing cry (as the army draws nearer), and by a 'swinging (or beckoning) of the hand' (see for the phrase, x. 32; and comp. xlix. 22).—The princes i.e., the long-established dynasties, which the barbarian parvenus are to overthrow.

<sup>3</sup> Jehovah's explanation of the summons in v. 2. The war is to be a crusade, a jehâd. My consecrated ones Warriors were 'hallowed' or 'consecrated' by the sacrifices offered before the campaign (comp. 1 Sam. xiii. 9). The prophet boldly declares that the Persian army is not 'consecrated' to Ahuramazda, but to Jehovah. Comp. in Q. P. B., Jer. xxii. 7, Zeph. i. 7, and Jer. li. 27, 28 (based on our passage).—My proudly triumphant ones] Alluding, says Hitz, to the vainglorious character of the Persians, comp. Herod. i. 89. But this is unnecessary; the phrase describes the exuberant spirits of the warrior, and refers not exclusively to the Persians, but to all the barbarian peoples. It recurs in Zeph. iii. 11 in a bad sense, of the haughty sinners of Zion. Which of the two passages is the original, is a complicated question, not to be settled in a few words.

<sup>5</sup> From the end of the heavens] Heaven being conceived as an immense dome resting on the earth. So Ps. xix. 7, Deut. iv. 32 (twice), xxx. 4 = Neh. i. 9).

dignation, to waste the whole earth. <sup>6</sup> Howl ye, for the day of Jehovah is near; as a destruction from him who is powerful to destroy shall it come. <sup>7</sup> Therefore shall all hands be slack, and every human heart shall melt: <sup>8</sup> and they shall be dismayed, taking hold of pangs and throes; as a travelling woman shall they writhe, they shall look aghast each one at the other, faces of flames their faces. <sup>9</sup> Behold, the day of

<sup>6</sup> Comp. Joel ii. 1, Zeph. i. 7. A day of Jehovah in its original, popular sense is a victory of Israel's God over Israel's enemies ('day' as in ix. 4); see Am. v. 18, probably the earliest passage in which the phrase occurs. The prophets adopted the phrase, disburdened it of its grosser associations, and made it a symbol of the great judicial retribution in store both for Jew and for Gentile. A parallel description to the present (and of a date equally disputed) is Joel iii. 11-16. 'Day' has now ceased to mean 'victory,' it comes nearer to 'assize'; Jehovah, indeed, has put off the arbitrariness of the warrior and delights in even-handed justice. Justice, however, is tempered by mercy, for 'who-soever shall call upon the name of Jehovah shall be saved' (Joel ii. 32). It is impossible to unite all the various features of this 'day,' as given in the different prophecies in a single picture. See, however, H. Schultz, Alltestamentliche Theologie, pp. 690-2, and on the original conception, W. R. Smith, The Prophets of Israel, p. 397.—As a destruction . . . i.e., with all the characteristics (such as suddenness and completeness, Jer. iv. 20, Weir), of a direct intervention of the Lord of Nature. The Hebr. is k'shōd mish-shaddai, an assonance difficult to reproduce tersely. So again Joel i. 15. The name here given to God is rarely found in the prophets. Wherever it does occur (Joel i. 15, Ezek. i. 24, x. 5), it appears to express the more severe and awful side of the Divine nature.

A similar impression is produced by its use in Ruth i. 20, Ps. lxxviii. 14 (15); and though in the Book of Job (23 times), in the Pentateuch (8 times, excluding compound proper names), and in Ps. xci. 1, it seems to be used as a mere synonym for El or Elohim, it must at least be clear that force, and specially force as exhibited in a dangerous aspect in some natural phenomena, is the original meaning of the word (a meaning suitable enough in early times, comp. Ex. vi. 3). Geiger and Dr. Robertson Smith<sup>1</sup> have shown that the interpretation Almighty (found in Sept. generally, in Vulg. Pentateuch, and, virtually, sometimes in Pesh.) arises ultimately out of a false etymology, presupposed, it seems, by the pointing, as if the word meant 'sufficient.' It is, of course, still possible to derive from shādad, and explain 'the destructive,' comp. the Phœnician šādidos<sup>2</sup> (= Arab. shadid, violent). But as Shaddai is in usage generally a substantive, and not an adjective, to El, 'God,' it is plausible to connect the word with Aram. sh'dā, 'to throw or pour out.' It will then have meant originally (i.e., before its adoption by Biblical writers) the rain-giver or the thunderer—a sense abundantly justified by analogies. An Assyrian cognate is no doubt still wanting, unless we compare sadu, mountain (projection).<sup>3</sup> The word stands up in the later Hebrew vocabulary like a rare monument of a primitive age (Ewald).

The phrase is difficult. Most have attempted to make it out to be equivalent to the parallel clause, but without success, for a paralysing terror rather produces paleness (Jer. xxx. 6). But is this necessary? May we not suppose a transition from horror-struck alarm to 'excitement flashing up amidst their terror, as when flames rise out of thick volumes of smoke' (Kay)? Joel ii. 6 sometimes quoted is not in point; see Q. P. B.

<sup>10</sup> For the stars 'Light is sown for the righteous' (Ps. xcvi. 11); consequently, the punishment of the wicked takes place in darkness. Comp. Joel ii. 10.—The Orions thereof i.e., Orion, and the constellations equal to it in brightness. 'Orion' is in Hebr. k'sil (whence the name of the month Chisleu, Ass. kisiluv), the 'foolhardy' giant who strove with Jehovah, as Hebrew folk-lore told (comp. Job xxxviii. 31). Here, however, the original mythic element has been almost effaced; the name has become applied to constellations in general. (See Last Words, vol. ii., and comp. Steinthal in Goldziher's Hebrew Mythology, appendix, p. 427. (It is true, we have not absolute certainty that the Hebrew k'sil is Orion. The Chaldeo-Assyrian astrology gave the name kisiluv to the ninth month, connecting it with the zodiacal sign Sagittarius. But M. A. Stern's argument still seems to me a valid defence of the above view.<sup>1</sup> We must beware of inferring too much from the verbal correspondence of allied myths.)

<sup>11</sup> The world 'That is, the Babylonish empire; as ἡ οἰκουμένη for the Roman empire, or for Judea, Luke ii. 1, Acts xi. 28' (Lowth). But the analogy of prophecy compels us to interpret the words more strictly. See on v. 4.

<sup>13</sup> Amidst convulsive throes, the present world comes to an end. See on xxiv. 19, 20.—Therefore Clearly this is in no immediate connection with the preceding statement that few men shall survive the judgment. Rather it introduces an intensified description of the terror of Jehovah's Day, and is explained by the latter half of the verse. Because Jehovah's anger is so hot, therefore he will sweep away the scene of man's rebellion. The corresponding image of a new heaven and earth does not appear in this prophecy.—The earth shall move quaking . . . A clear allusion to Job ix. 6, where the

<sup>17</sup> The first to be mentioned by name are the invaders. They are the Medes, or, in Hebrew and Assyrian, Madai. We cannot here altogether avoid trenching on the province of the 'higher criticism.' Even the most cursory examination of the text suggests the twofold question,—How can Isaiah have referred to the Medes, and how can a prophet of the Exile (if such a one be the author rather than Isaiah, on account of 'the Medes') not have mentioned the Persians ? Some light is thrown on the former point by the inscriptions, which from Ramman-nirari III. onwards (or say, from B.C. 810) from time to time record the conquests of the Assyrian kings in Media, and indeed by the Old Testament itself, for, according to 2 Kings xvii. 6, xviii. 11, a part of the captive Israelites had a dwelling-place assigned to them

'in the cities of the Medes.' Media, therefore, was not beyond the horizon of a well-informed Hebrew writer, and in spite of the fact that the Medes are only mentioned in Isaiah in prophecies of disputed authorship (here, and in xxi. 2), and not again till the Persian period (Ezra vi. 2, Dan. v. 28, &c., Esth. i. 3), I conclude that Isaiah may conceivably have referred by name to the Medes, just as in xxii. 6 he refers to Elam (see, however, Introd. to chap. xxii.) Then (δ) as to the non-mention of the name of Persia which might at first sight appear surprising in a prophetic writer of the period of the Exile. It is quite true that the name 'Persia' occurs in Ezekiel (xxvii. 10, xxxviii. 5), but this does not exclude the Captivity-origin of Isaiah xiii. any more than the occurrence of 'Medes' for 'Persians' in Herodotus or Thucydides <sup>1</sup> disproves the contemporary origin of a work in which the word 'Persians' occurs. Besides, as I have remarked elsewhere (I. C. A., p. 137), the name Persia occurs in Ezekiel 'in company with other names which were certainly unfamiliar to the great majority of Hebrews ;' and if, on philological grounds, a critic should be led to maintain that chap. xiii. was written by a prophet of the Exile, he can offer an additional reason for the special mention of the Medes rather than the Persians, viz. that the generals of Cyrus were apparently Medes (e.g., Mazares and Harpagus, Herod. i.

the Medes against them, who regard not silver and take no pleasure in gold. <sup>18</sup> And bows shall dash in pieces the youths, and on the fruit of the womb they shall have no compassion; their eye shall not be sorry for children. <sup>19</sup> And Babylon, the splendour of kingdoms, the proud ornament of Chaldea, shall be as at God's overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah. <sup>20</sup> It shall be uninhabited for ever, and be uncoupled for successive generations; and the Arab shall not pitch tent there, and shepherds shall not cause to lie down there. <sup>21</sup> But wild cats shall lie down there, and jackals

157, 162). The latter circumstance is rather remarkable. It may be accounted for partly from the important share which the Median army had taken in Cyrus's earliest victory (they revolted against Astyages, and sent him captive to Cyrus), and partly from the fact, so repugnant to the Persian mind, that Cyrus, an Aryan by origin, had become practically a non-Aryan, as being King of 'Anzan' or Elam—he does not indeed call himself a Persian. See the Cyrus inscription commented upon in Essay xi.—Who regard not silver] Either because it is a war for vengeance, not for booty (Del.), or because gold and silver money was confined to the Semitic world, i.e. to Phœnicia and the regions with which it was in relation.

<sup>19</sup> As at God's overthrow . . .] Evidently the phrase has become proverbial. See Am. iv. 11 in the Hebrew, and see on i. 7.

<sup>20</sup> The Arab] Nomad Arabian tribes are mentioned by Sargon on the other side of the Tigris as far as Elam.

<sup>21, 22</sup> Parallel passage, xxxiv. 14. The precise species of the animals are not always certain; one of the words used has Assyrian affinities (see crit. note). The first clause of the verse is antithetical to the last of v. 20. A worse fate is reserved for Babylon than for less guilty cities (comp. v. 17):—not flocks of sheep, but their deadly enemy, the jackal, 'shall lie down there.' Then, as for 'their palaces, where luxury late reigned' (see context in Par. Lost, xi. 750), the only inhabitants shall be demons and demon-like animals. It is worthy of remark, that there is no mention of demons or evil spirits, except in prophecies upon regions utterly excluded from the kingdom of Jehovah, such as Babylon and Edom (chaps. xiii., xxxiv.), prophecies, too, which are denied by many, if not most, critics to Isaiah.—Did the writer or writers of these prophecies themselves believe in the existence of the demons? They may have done so (at any rate, if exiles in Babylonia), or they may have used them as poetical decorations; but in either case, they entirely subordinated them to the One God, Jehovah. None of the great prophets could have written the words which Mr. Budge has rendered thus from an Inscription (14) in vol. iv. of Brit. Mus. Coll., 'An incantation to the desert places holy may it go forth!' It is more than probable, however, that the belief in the demons of the desert at any rate increased among the Jews during the Exile, owing to its prevalence in Babylonia and Assyria—see Lenormant, La Magie, p. 29, and comp. Levy, Z. d. m. G., ix. 461–491. There is a striking Assyrian parallel to the present passage in the Annals of Assurbanipal (Cyl. A. col. 7, l. 7, 8, Smith and Lenormant). As a feature of the devastation of Elam, the king relates, 'Wild asses, serpents, beasts of the desert, and bull-shaped demons, safely I caused to lie down in them.' This passage is remarkable for its occurrence in a historical inscription. As for the Babylonian documents on magic, they simply abound in references to the demons of the desert who lie in wait for human prey.—Satyrs] i.e., demons or goblins shaped like goats, which, we know from Lev. xvii. 7, 2 Chron. xi. 15, were sacrificed to by some of the Israelites. The combination is, no doubt, an odd one to Western readers, 'jackals, ostriches, demons, hyænas.' But there is a similar one in the passage quoted from Assurbanipal, and we shall meet with another in xxxiv. 14.—Coverdale's 'apes,' Kay's 'baboons,' are against usage. Alt. rend. is, however, quite admissible ; see in support of it Alexander's note, and De Goeje, De Gids, 1865, pp. 546-7. Several interesting questions are connected with the Hebr. word (se'irim) ; see Gesenius's Commentary or Thesaurus, and Baudissin, Studien, i. 136-9. Our passage is imitated in Jer. l. 39 ; comp. also ch. xxxiv. 14, 15.

CHAPTER XIV.

<sup>1</sup> For Jehovah will have compassion upon Jacob, and will yet again choose Israel, and settle them on their own ground ; and the foreigner shall join himself to them, and they shall attach themselves to the house of Jacob ; <sup>2</sup> and peoples shall take them and bring them to their place, and the house of Israel shall take them in possession on Jehovah's ground for bondmen and for bondmaids : and they shall become the captors of their captors, and shall subdue their tyrants.

<sup>1-23</sup> The general reason of the judgment on the world is the world's accumulated sin (chap. xiii.). The special reason of that upon Babylon is the servitude in which it has held Israel.

<sup>1</sup> Will yet again choose] The Captivity seemed to imply a resignation on Jehovah's part of his rights over Israel. Comp. Hos. ix. 3, 'They shall not dwell in Jehovah's land,' and lxiii. 19.—The foreigner] Lit. the sojourner (comp. Ex. xx. 10, 'thy sojourner'). A characteristic idea of II. lv. 5, lvi. 3 (see note) ; as also is that of the friendly escort given by the Gentiles, xlix. 22, lx. 9. In later Hebrew 'sojourner' = proselyte.

<sup>2</sup> For bondmen and for bondmaids] This is no doubt partly intended as a righteous retribution—hence the allusion to their 'tyrants.' But in the case of some of the Gentiles, we are meant to suppose that fear will have passed into love, and that they will press for admission into the community of Israel in even the lowest capacity. This is clearly a part of the prophet's meaning (if the song was originally written for its present place), for he has just spoken of a voluntary adhesion on the part of 'the sojourners.' Comp. also xlv. 14; but contrast lvi. 6, 7, where the 'foreigners' are allowed to 'join themselves unto Jehovah' on equal terms with born Jews.—Shall subdue . . .] Thus the promise in Deut. xv. 6 shall be ultimately fulfilled.

<sup>3</sup> The hard service] See on xlvii. 6.—This taunt-song] Hebr. māshāl, i.e., a parallelistic poem (Dichtung)—the parallelism may consist either in the moral application of emblems, or simply in the parallel disposition of the lines and the sense. From the fact that emblems were generally applied in a witty, satirical manner, māshāl sometimes obtains the meaning of taunt-song, as here, and in Mic. ii. 4, Hab. ii. 6. Sept. translates ὁπηγορ, a rendering of māshāl which is nowhere else found, but which though unsuitable enough to the contents (the condolence in vv. 10, 12 being only bitter affectation), is justified by the form of this māshāl. Its resemblance to the first four Lamentations is all the more remarkable, as xiii. 1–xiv. 2, and xiv. 22, 23, are written in an entirely different style.—The song falls into five strophes, each consisting of seven long lines (v. 17 b is the only exception). This, however, involves accepting Ewald's arrangement of vv. 19, 20 (see end of note on v. 20). Verses 22 and 23 form an epilogue or appendix.

<sup>7</sup> They burst out . . .] The phrase only occurs besides in II. Isaiah (4 times); the verb also in Ps. xcvi. 4 (comp. Isa. lii. 9).

<sup>8</sup> The pine-trees] According to Schrader the Hebr. brōsh and Ass. burasū, mean the so-called sherbin-tree (my own rend. of fastus in xli. 19, see note); Tristram prefers the Aleppo pine, a tree highly characteristic of Lower Lebanon, and only inferior to the cedar. The cypress, which Ewald and many others have adopted, is said to be rare in Lebanon, and probably had another name in Hebrew corresponding to Ass. tabran and Aram. dafrano (see Schrader, K. G. F., p. 218).

—Rejoice at thee] The poet knows nothing of our modern dualism. Man and nature sympathise (comp. Gen. iii. 18). The passage is therefore not really parallel to Virgil's 'Intonsi montes,' &c. (see Conington's Virgil, vol. i., Introduction.) But why are the trees of Lebanon mentioned. Because

<sup>9</sup> Sheól is disturbed] Starts up in excitement on the arrival of so eminent a stranger. The same verb is applied to the shade of Samuel (1 Sam. xxviii. 15). In this first clause, therefore, Sheól may perhaps be used collectively of the entire population of shades.<sup>1</sup> In the next clause, however, the choice of the verb and the change of gender from feminine to masculine indicates that Sheól is personified as a single Will, whose electrifying influence not even kingly shades can resist. The personification (audacissima, Rosenmüller) may be aided by a lingering consciousness of the original mythical demigod Sheól (if the theory offered on v. 14 be correct).—Stirreth up the shades] The 'shades' are the 'weak,' the 'nerveless,' as their name in Hebrew and Phœnician r'faim indicates—comp. εἰδωλα καμώτων. Hence they need to be 'stirred up.' A similar phrase occurs in the Babylonio-Assyrian Legend of Ishtar (ed. Schrader, pp. 8, 9), where the goddess Ishtar threatens that she will 'stir up the dead.'—The bell-wethers] i.e., the princes. So Zech. x. 3, comp. Jer. l. 8, and so in Accadian and Assyrian (Friedr. Del.). Bell-wethers and rams are frequently used as figures in Arab war-songs (Kremer), and a Hebrew proverb-writer, in a list of comely things, mentions a he-goat and a king. Comp. Tristram's Natural History of the Bible, p. 88.—

Maketh to arise . . .] If we may interpret this on the analogy of the superstitions of primitive races elsewhere, it would seem to indicate a lingering popular belief among the Jews that the political and social relations once formed were not interrupted by death. Once a king, for ever a king. (Again comp. the Legend of Ishtar.) Hence the kings here are said to be seated on their thrones ; hence the dead warriors in Ezek. xxxii. 27 have their swords buried with them (to ensure a phantom-sword in Sheól) ; and hence the prophet Samuel is said to come up from Sheól wearing his accustomed robe (1 Sam. xxviii. 14). It would seem, too, as if the kings and warriors were believed to have a whole compartment of Sheól to themselves (see on v. 14).

<sup>10</sup> The astonishment of the kings at the fall of so great a being (comp. Lucian's 13th Dialogue of the Dead (ad init.)).—Shall answer] 'To answer' is used widely in Hebrew. Sometimes the question is expressed, sometimes only suggested by the circumstances as here (comp. Job iii. 2). Here the address of the shades is at an end.

<sup>11</sup> Contains a triumphal exclamation of the Jews. The cause of their joy only comes out by degrees. First, it seems to be the cessation of all that pomp and luxury for which Babylon was famous. Then, the collapse of the king's blasphemous dreams of deification. Finally, the insults heaped upon his dead body are detailed.—The sound of thy cymbals]

<sup>12</sup> How art thou fallen . . . ] Parallel passages, Lam. ii. 1, Matt. xi. 23. In his pride and splendour the king of Babylon had been like the morning-star (comp. Rev. xxii. 16), here described as a 'son of the Dawn' (the Dawn, personified, is a relic of the mythic stage ; comp. in the Hebr. Job iii. 9, xli. 10, Ps. cxxxix. 11). The Assyrian texts refer to a masculine as well as a feminine Venus. The former had a title (mustilil) closely related to the Hebr. Melel, rendered here 'Shining One'; its period was from sunset onwards, that of the feminine Venus from sunrise onwards.<sup>1</sup> Kusters<sup>2</sup> finds here an allusion, parallel to that in xxiv. 21, to the belief in the jurisdiction of the star-spirits over the kingdoms of the earth. This seems to be supported by the words of the king in the next verse (on which Dr. Kay propounds a similar view).

<sup>13, 14</sup> The sin of the king of Babylon, self-deification. Let me remark here that, amply justified as the Hebrew poet is by the language of some parts of the inscriptions, the sentiment of humility and repentance was not unknown to the kings of Assyria and Babylon. 'Ils savaient faire un retour sur eux-mêmes, et s'avouer pécheurs sous les coups qui les frappaient.'<sup>3</sup> They were 'gods of the nations' (Ezek. xxxi. 11), but avowed their weakness before the only 'great gods.'

—And thou ] (thou, who art brought so low) . . . To the heavens will I go up ] This is not a mere hyperbole of rhetorical origin (comp. Job. xx. 6, and perhaps Ps. lxxiii. 9), any more than the salutation 'O king, live for ever !' is a mere hyperbole ; it has rather a solid foundation in primitive religious belief. We must not, however, connect it with the stories of Titans scaling the heavens, but with the Oriental belief in kings as incarnations of the Divine. The Egyptians, no doubt, gave the fullest expression to this belief, but the Assyrian kings (e.g., Shalmaneser and Assurbanipal) are distinctly called sons of this and that deity—the proto-Babylonians went even further, as we may argue from the determinative of divinity prefixed to some of the kings' names (see Last Words, vol. ii.). It was but rational to take the next step, and admit these semi-divine beings to a share in the family life of their celestial parents. I do not know that this can be proved as yet in the case of the Assyrians and Babylonians, though the mention of the 'land of the silver sky' (= heaven), in the Royal Psalm translated by Schrader, and less accurately by Fox Talbot (R. P., iii. 133), confirms the conjecture that such a belief existed. Even apart from this, we have the same right to use the statement of the prophet as to a Babylonian belief that we have to use the parallel statement of Ezekiel relative to the Tyrian doctrine on the same subject (Ezek. xxviii. 2, 6, 9, 13, 14). How largely this view increases the force of the passage, I need hardly point out. The king of Babylon expected to join the ranks of the gods. No, replies the prophet, thou shalt be hurled down to Sheól (v. 15).—The mountain of assembly or . . . of meeting. The expression is not found elsewhere, but the meaning is clear. It is a mountain whose summit is among the 'stars of God,' and whose base is 'in the recesses of the north.' Mount Zion, which early writers fix upon with one consent (comp. 'tent of assembly,' or 'of meeting,' Ex. xxvii. 21, &c.), is therefore at once excluded, unless, with Dr. Weir, we regard it 'with the eye of faith' as the Zion of the Messianic age, which shall be 'exalted above the hills' (ii. 2; comp. Heb. xii. 22-24), and even then we have only tried to remove half the difficulty, for from a Hebrew point of view Jerusalem was the centre of the earth (Ezek. v. 5), and from a Babylonian certainly not in the extreme north. No one probably would have thought of mount Zion, were it not for the apparent parallelism of Ps. xlviii. 2 (3): 'Beautiful of elevation, the joy of the whole earth, mount Zion, the recesses of the north, the city of the great King.' What this passage means, no one has yet been able satisfactorily to explain, and very possibly the words 'the recesses of the north' are an interpolation due to a scribe who interpreted 'the city of the great King' of Nineveh. At any rate, we have no right to interpret a clear passage by our private hypothesis respecting an obscure one. Dr. Weir's candid concession, however, greatly simplifies the discussion between the advocates and the adversaries of the traditional explanation. Let it be granted, for the moment, that the Babylonian king anticipates lording it over the sacred mountain of Israel. Still it is not of that mountain in its phenomenal but in its ideal character that he speaks—not of mount Zion as it appears, but as it is before God, and will be one day before men. Now, a conception of this kind would be unintelligible to a Babylonian, unless he could connect it with some similar beliefs of his own people. That similar beliefs existed among the Indians, Iranians, Greeks, and other races, has long been known, but it is only since the recent advances of Assyriology that we have learned their existence among the Assyrians and Babylonians. Among the titles of the great god Assur is 'king of all the assembly of the great gods' (Sayce, R. P., iii. 83), and there is a fragment of Berosus (Moses of Khorene, i. 7), which speaks of a mountain of the assembly of the gods. In the inscriptions this mountain is most frequently called 'the mountain of the lands' (i.e., of the world), and in a bilingual text (W. A. I., iv. 27, 2) we read that, like Atlas, 'its head rivals heaven' (Sayce; Friedr. Del.). That it was placed in the north has not yet been ascertained, but may be assumed from our passage as not improbable.

We are not bound, however, to identify the 'mountain of assembly' either with mount Zion or (tempting as this may be) with any specially Babylonian mythic mountain. Ezek. xxviii. 13, 14 proves that there was a tradition, akin to the Babylonian, among the Jews themselves, of a 'holy mountain of Elohim,' on the slopes of which lay the garden or rather paradise (park) of Eden.<sup>1</sup> This tradition, which may have been a primitive heirloom, is quite sufficient to account for the language poetically given to the Baby-

The Sabians in Harran turned to the north in prayer (En-Nedîm, ap. Chwolson). Comp. also Servius ad Virg. Æn. ii. 693, &c.; Laws of Manu, i. 67, ii. 52, 70.

<sup>15</sup> Nevertheless] Said in grave satire. Not to the recesses (or far parts) of the north, but to those of the pit. Instead of scaling the heights of Olympus, thou art thrust within the gates of Hades at its base! It was the Babylonian belief that the dark land of Arālu (= Sheól) lay underneath the World-mountain. Hence Sargon speaks of the gods and goddesses who have been 'steadfastly (kinis) brought forth amidst the house of the mountain of the lands, of Arālu' (Khor-sabad Inscr., l. 156). See Friedr. Del., Paradies, 117; Schrader, K. A. T. 389. Obs. the conceptions of the pit (or grave) and Sheól tend towards fusion. Comp. lxvi. 24 (note), where only the torments of the dead body are spoken of, but those of the soul (or shade) are equally in the mind of the writer, and are only not described from his sense of their indescribability.

<sup>18</sup> Other kings of more modest pretensions are buried honourably, each one in his house, i.e., in a sepulchre of his own. The trouble which Egyptian kings took about their pyramid-graves is well known. The Babylonian tyrant, too, had built one for himself ('thy grave'), but was never to occupy it. 'House' = grave, as in Eccles. xii. 5, 'his (man's) perpetual house,' and as in Phœnician (Melit. ii. 1) and Egyptian (Ebers, Aegypten, i. 169).—Clothed] But not with grave-clothes! A strange expression, and the correctness of the text may be doubted.

nounced upon the king and his family (Ex. xx. 5)—still upon the field of battle. He himself is excluded from burial with his predecessors—for a king the highest possible disgrace (2 Chr. xxi. 20, xxiv. 25, Jer. xxii. 19, Ezek. xxix. 5). The phraseology of the curse may be paralleled from various sources—Greek, Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Phœnician. For the four former, see Ebers, Aegypten, i. 169; Schlottmann, Eschmunazar, p. 37; Records of the Past, v. 26, ix. 36; and for the latter comp. these lines from the Inscr. of Eschmunazar, king of Sidon (iv. 4-6, Schl.): 'Let him (the king who opens the lid of this couch) not have a couch with the shades, and let him not be buried in the grave, and let him not have son and seed in his stead.' Thus, the king of Babylon is mulcted of immortality in two senses: he neither drinks of the water of life with the gods (comp. on v. 13), nor lives again (according to the old Semitic view) in his children. And the cause of all this (regarding the sin of the king from a fresh point of view) is that his ambitious wars have been the ruin of his country—because thou hast destroyed thy land, &c. The words here placed at the head of the verse have received a most unsuitable place in the received text. It is difficult, in fact, to make any strict exegesis of them there. How is it possible that those who have been slain by the side of the king of Babylon should be described as 'those who are buried in a costly tomb built of hewn stones'? for such is clearly the meaning of the words those who have gone down (or go down) to the stones of the pit. Surely this was a most unlikely honour for the masses of the slain! Ewald's arrangement is both natural in itself, and greatly relieves v. 19, which before was awkwardly long.—Heaps] i.e., ruined cities; comp. xvii. 1, Ps. lxxix. 1. 'Cities' gives no good sense. Why should cities be denounced so unqualifiedly? See crit. note.

<sup>22, 23</sup> The song is at an end, and is supplemented by a direct revelation from Jehovah, extending the punishment to the whole of Babylon.—The assonances in v. 22 are inimitable.—Bittern] Generally 'hedgehog,' but this does not frequent the marshes. The bittern is still common in the reedy swamps of the Euphrates, and its 'strange, booming note' (Tristram) is as awesome a sound as the wail of the hyæna. and will sweep it with the besom of destruction, is the oracle of Jehovah Sabáoth.

vv. 24-27. A solemn repetition of Jehovah's assurance of the impending destruction of the Assyrian invaders. The circumstances closely resemble those of chap. x. 5-xii. 6; and a part of v. 25 is almost identical with a part of x. 27. The passage must once have stood close to the former prophecy, without, however, strictly speaking, belonging to it.

vv. 28-32. The Philistines are exulting over the death of their oppressor; but the prophet sees that their joy is premature. Meantime Judah is enjoying repose after her troubles.—This is the first of a series of prophecies on foreign nations called forth by the alarming progress of the Assyrians. 'Out of the north a smoke cometh.' It is a question whether the king of Assyria, whose hosts are referred to, is Tiglath-Pileser, Sargon, or Sennacherib. The late Mr. George Smith (T. S. B. A., ii. 325) supposed him to be the former, but the analogy of neighbouring prophecies, in which only Sargon or Sennacherib can be referred to, is against this view. It has also been doubted whether both the persons spoken of in the prophecy, the one under the figure of a 'rod' or a 'snake,' the other under that of a 'great viper' or a 'flying serpent,' are Assyrian kings, or whether only the latter is so, the former being the Jewish king, Ahaz (so I. C. A., after Ewald). It is certainly most natural to understand them as successive Assyrian kings, and the only objection is the chronological statement in the heading, which implies that Ahaz is the rod which was broken, and consequently that the depredations of the

<sup>28</sup> My mountains] It would seem as if the Assyrians were now encamped on the hills of Judah before Jerusalem (comp. x. 32). The same phrase in xlix. 11, lxv. 9, Zech. xiv. 5, Ezek. xxxviii. 21. It reminds us of the fancy of the Syrians that Jehovah was 'a god

Philistines in the land of Judah (2 Chr. xxviii. 18) supplied the motive for the prophecy. But the genuineness of this, as of other headings in Isaiah, is most questionable (see I. C. A., p. 41); the heading seems to have originated in a fancy adopted also in the Targum that the 'rod' or the 'snake' (nakhsh) meant 'the stock of Jesse (xi. 1), Jesse being identified with the Nahash of 2 Sam. xvii. 25.<sup>1</sup> This would make Hezekiah 'the basilisk,' and the Messiah 'the flying serpent'; it is, however, obviously contradicted by the description of the Jews as being (though secure themselves from attack) 'poor' and 'helpless,' in fact, as incapable of taking vengeance or making conquests.

'Root' and 'fruit' in the sequel are suggested by the 'rod.'—

A flying serpent] A popular belief used poetically (comp. parallels in xiii. 21, xxxiv. 14, 15)—not a lightning-myth, as Goldziher, but to be compared with the flying white serpents of Arabic literature ('Aghany, ix. 135'), which were really jinn or malicious genii. Kremer well accounts for this from the ghost-like ways of serpents (Culturgeschichte des Orients, ii. 257). Herodotus (ii. 75, comp. iii. 107) also refers to winged serpents which invaded Egypt from Arabia—a 'traveller's tale.' ## CHAPTERS XV.-XVI.

UNDOUBTEDLY a prophecy against Moab (see xvi. 13). I am not myself certain whether the predictive element pervades the whole prophecy, or whether it is confined (at any rate in chap. xv.) to v. 9b. All critics, however, except Eichhorn, adopt the former alternative, according to which the invasion of Moab is still future, and the prophet, with vivid imagination, describes what the inhabitants of the different localities will feel, say, and do in their distress. The vision (as it may laxly be termed) falls into three parts (xv. 1-9, xvi. 1-5, 6-12), and is followed by two verses announcing the speedy fulfilment of that which 'Jehovah hath spoken formerly.'

These two appended verses are admitted by all critics (except Bleek and Geiger) to be the work of Isaiah. But there is a difference of opinion as to the authorship of the preceding prophecy. The statement in the appendix may mean either that Isaiah adopts and ratifies the work of an earlier prophet, or simply that he is now enabled to give a more specific revelation. We have already had an instance of the case supposed by the former alternative in ii. 2-4, and Jeremiah has adopted and expanded this very oracle in part of chap. xlviii. One of the psalms, too, probably has the substance of an ancient oracle imbedded in it (Ps. lx.). The conjecture of non-Isaianic authorship is therefore a perfectly natural one; can it also be said to be required by the contents of the prophecy? The reasons for an affirmative answer are two:—1. The flow of sympathy, unparalleled in Isaiah, towards the objects of the predicted judgment; 2. The writer's minute acquaintance with Moabitish topography, which points to a N. Israelite; and 3. The tediousness and archaic simplicity of the style (note the accumulation of assonances in the Hebrew, and of 'for' and 'therefore'), combined with certain words and phrases unknown to Isaiah. On the other hand, it is urged: 1. that Isaiah does occasionally give way to an elegiac mood (see i. 2-6, 21, xxii. 4, xxviii. 1-4), and though the other instances of this relate to Judah or Israel, the historical connection between Israel and Moab may account for Isaiah's sympathy with this kindred people; and 2. (for the argument from the topographical knowledge, however slight, cannot be replied to) that the non-Isaianic words and phrases (Knobel's list requires sifting) may be balanced by the Isaianic parallels (?), especially in xvi. 4b, 5. My own impression is very strongly against the Isaianic authorship of the prophecy, except the verse and a half just referred to. I would not deny, however, that Isaiah may have altered words here and there, as Jeremiah did afterwards, and the obscurity of xvi. 1-4 leads me to conjecture that the original text has here been shortened. See further, Last Words, vol. ii.

It would be unwise to dogmatise as to the date of the original prophecy. It was at any rate subsequent to the revolt of Mesha, king of Moab, who, as we learn from the Moabite Stone, recovered and fortified ('built') the towns which Omri, king of Israel, had destroyed. Seven (probably) of the names in this prophecy are mentioned on the Moabitish monument—Dibon, Nebo, Arnon, Jahaz, Medeba, Horonaim, Sibmah (see on xvi. 8), from which Dean (now Bishop) Walsh has inferred that 'Isaiah' and Jeremiah were acquainted with the inscription. Comp. further the writer's Commentary on Jeremiah (chap. xlviii.).

The name of the original foe of the Moabites is not mentioned, but the description points to a nomad or semi-nomad population, either the Arabs (Ew.) or the Israelitish tribes on the E. of the Jordan (Hitz.) The enemy expected, and perhaps dimly referred to in xv. 9 ('the lion'), is undoubtedly either Sargon or Sennacherib. The north side of the Arnon seems to have been a battle-field of races.

<sup>1</sup> [For] This particle occurs no less than fourteen times in this and the next chapter. It is probably in all cases causal or explanatory, and we may conjecture that words like 'Alas for Moab !' or 'Lament ye for Moab !' were in the mind of the writer (comp. xxiii. i. 14), though in his lyric excitement he forgot to express them. Some have accounted for the frequency of the word 'for' as an imitation of a Moabitish peculiarity. This seems to be at any rate the case with the next word in the Hebrew (see critical note).—In the night] When the terrors of a stormed town would be at their height ; comp. Ps. xci. 5, 'the terror by night.' Mesha, king of Moab, boasts of having assaulted Nebo at dawn (Moabite Stone, l. 15).—Ar-Moab] i.e., citadel of Moab (Targ. has Prakkā, i.e. 'fortress.') This was clearly the capital ; it seems to be the unnamed city described in Josh. xiii. 9, 16, and also the Areopolis mentioned in Eusebius and Stephen of Byzantium, and in the acts of Synods of the fifth and sixth centuries.—Kir-Moab] i.e., city of Moab. Probably the still existing Kerak (the 'Petra Deserta' of the middle ages), which rises impreguably on a peak more than 4,000 feet above the Dead Sea, surrounded on all sides by still higher mountains (which may explain 2 Kings iii. 25 end). Dr. Ginsburg, however, disputes this and the last identification. Obs. no less than nineteen or twenty Moabite towns are mentioned in this and the next chapter. A similar profusion of names occurs in the inscription of king Mesha (the so-called Moabite Stone). These very early documents, combined with the many ruined cities and temples, the thousands of cisterns, and the roads paved with squared blocks, prove that the fertile plains of Moab were once occupied by a people not a whit inferior in civilisation to the Israelites.

of the verb must be borrowed from the second clause.—The temple] Lit. the house. No doubt the prophet means the Beth-bamoth ('House of High Places') of the inscription on the Moabite Stone (l. 27), which Schlottmann rightly identified with the Bamoth-Baal mentioned in Josh. xiii. 17, side by side with Dibon. Instead of simply saying 'Dibon is gone up to Beth-bamoth to weep,' the prophet breaks the clause into two, for there can be little doubt that 'the high places' in the second member of the verse means the same spot as 'the temple' in the first. Conder identifies these 'bamoth' with a group of dolmens at Mushfbiyeh (Pal. Fund Statement, April, 1882); but would not the Moabites prefer altars of their own building?—Dibon] i.e., its population, is naturally said to 'go up,' lying as it does in a plain ('the plain of Medeba unto Dibon,' Josh. xiii. 9). It lies in a direct line north of Aroer and the Arnon. Here (its modern name is Dībān) the famous Moabite Stone was found—and broken up, though it has been skilfully pieced together, as far as possible, and now rests in the Louvre. See the English monograph on the inscription by Dr. Ginsburg, and the German ones by Schlottmann and Nöldeke.—Dibon was one of the towns claimed by the Reubenites (Num. xxxii. 34), but the Inscription of Mesha states (line 10) that 'the men of Gad dwelt in the land . . . from of old.'—On Nebo and on Medeba] Nebo is of course not the mountain-range so called, but a town near, deriving its name from the same old Semitic divinity. Medeba, at any rate, is on an eminence.—On all their heads is baldness] Comp. xxii. 12: 'And in that day did the Lord Jehovah Sabaoth call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth,' Job i. 20, Mic. i. 16. Had this cutting of the hair originally a sacrificial import (comp. Deut. xiv. 1, and Tylor, Primitive Culture, iii. 364)? It may be so, but here it is merely symbolical. It was also the primitive Arabic custom; see Krehl, Religion der vorislamit. Araber, p. 33, note 1, and compare Herod. ii. 36.—Jeremiah further elaborates the description (xlviii. 37).

<sup>a</sup> Running down . . .] Lit. coming down. So Jeremiah, 'that our eyes may run down in tears' (ix. 18, comp. xiii. 17, xiv. 17). By a bold extension of the figure, the whole person is represented as immersed in tears.

<sup>a</sup> Heshbon . . . Elealeh] Neighbouring hill towns.—Jahaz] Far to the south, about midway between Heshbon and Kir-hareseth.—His soul . . .] The Moabitish people is personified. There is a play upon sounds in the two verbs rendered 'shriek' and 'quivereth' ('wail' and 'quails,' Rodwell).

end of the Dead Sea, in the parallel of Jericho (Smith's Dict. of the Bible); but I still follow Wetzstein (excursus in Delitzsch's Genesis, 4th ed.), who fixes it at the S.E. of the Sea in the Gōres-Şafia. The emigrants hope to get round by this way into the territory of Judah.—

A third year heifer] It is doubtful whether the crying of Moab is compared to that of a thwarted heifer, or whether the 'heifer' is a metaphorical description of the fortress of Zoar (comp. accents). I prefer the former view, which is substantially that of Vit. and of the A.V. of Jer. xlviii. 34. It is a third year heifer, just about to be broken in for the yoke (Plin. Hist. Nat. viii. 4, 5), of which the prophet is thinking. Those who adhere to the common text can still explain the figure of Moab. Ewald's rendering assumes that there were three Eglaths in Moab, which receives a precarious support from Ezekiel's reference to 'En Eglaim (Ezek. xlvii. 10), Abulfeda's to an 'Ejlûn (see Ges.), and Josephus' to an Agalla (Ant. xiv. 1, 4). Comp. also Notes and Criticisms, p. 20.—Horonaim] Probably on the borders of Edom: perhaps, too, the city of Sanballat 'the Horonite.'

<sup>a</sup> To the capture of the cities of Moab and the flight of the inhabitants a fresh reason for lamentation is added, viz., that the fertilizing waters of Nimrim have been stopped up at their sources by the enemy (comp. 2 Kings iii. 19, 25).

These waters gave their name to the town Beth-Nimrâ (Num. xxxii. 36). The name Nimara occurs among the towns conquered by Thothes III. Canon Tristram speaks of the 'plenteous brooks gushing from the lofty hills into the Ghor-en-Numeira' (comp. Nimrim); another site is proposed by Consul Wetzstein in the Wady So'eb, 134 miles east of Jordan (ap. Delitzsch, Genesis, ed. 4, pp. 572, 3). The name contains a reference to the panther, and appears, like many other animal-names of persons and places, to be rightly viewed as a vestige of totemism (see Last Words, vol. ii.).

Moab; even to Eglaim its howling (hath reached), and to Beer Elim its howling. <sup>9</sup> For the waters of Dimon are full of blood; for I destine for Dimon fresh (evils), for the escaped ones of Moab a lion, and for the remnant of the land.

<sup>9</sup> The waters of Dimon] i.e., the Arnon, just as the Kishon is described (Judg. v. 19) as the waters of Megiddo (Del.). It might with equal accuracy have been called 'the waters of Ar-Moab,' but the prophet wishes to enforce his words by a striking assonance. Dimon suggests the thought of dam, 'blood,' as if it meant town of carnage. Comp. Sanguinetto = blood-stream, the name of a small brook which falls into Lake Thrasimene, the scene of Hannibal's great battle; comp. also the similar allusions in Mic. i. 10-15. The name Dimon probably occurs again in Jer. xlviii. 2 (see on xxv. 10). It is only another form of Dibon. St. Jerome tells us that in his day both names were current for the same place.—Fresh (evils) . . . a lion (or, lions)] An enigmatical description of a conquering foe, either Judah (Hitz., Del., cf. Gen. xlix. 9), or (more probably—see xiv. 29, xxi. 16, 17, and comp. xvi. 4, 14) the Assyrians, who, as the Inscriptions prove, began to influence the fortunes of Palestine as early as the time of Ahab. For the figure, comp. v. 29, Jer. iv. 7.

CHAPTER XVI.

Chap. xvi. Verses 1-6 are dramatic in style, and necessarily rather obscure, an indication of the names of the several speakers not being customary in Hebrew. It is very possible, too, that the text is either imperfect or misarranged.

<sup>1</sup> Send ye the lambs] According to 2 Kings iii. 4, Mesha, king of Moab, 'rendered unto the king of Israel 100,000 lambs, and 100,000 rams, with the wool,' though on the death of Ahab he definitively renounced his allegiance. The prophet, as a devoted adherent of the Davidic family, exhorts the Moabites to renew their long-suspended tribute to their original suzerain, the king of Jerusalem (see 2 Sam. viii. 2); or, it may be, the chiefs of the Moabites exhort each other to take this step, as the power of the kingdom of Samaria is no longer adequate to the protection of Moab.

It is a little uncertain whether this section presupposes the same situation as the preceding verses—whether, that is, the Moabitish fugitives are now in Edom (this would account for the mention of Sela in v. 1), or whether the prophet has shifted his point of view, and regards the Moabites as still on their own side of the border. In the latter case, the speaker or speakers of v. 1 recommend for the tribute-bearers the southern route, which passed by Sela and traversed the desert, because the north end of the Dead Sea is blocked up by the enemy. This view seems to be favoured by the next verse (see note). Dr. Weir suggests that sela (lit., rock, or collectively rocks) may mean the whole rocky region in the midst of which the city of Sela was situated; comp. Jer. xlviii. 28, 'Quit

Zion.' <sup>2</sup> And it shall come to pass ; like wandering birds, (like) a scattered nest, shall be the daughters of Moab at the fords of Arnon. <sup>3</sup> 'Apply counsel, do the work of an umpire, make as the night thy shadow in the midst of the noon ; shelter the outcasts, him that wandereth betray not. <sup>4</sup> Let <sup>b</sup> the outcasts of Moab <sup>b</sup> sojourn with thee, be thou a shelter unto them from the face of the destroyer.' For at an end is the extortioner, finished is the destruction, consumed are the trampers out of the land. <sup>5</sup> And a throne is established through kindness, and there sitteth upon it with faithfulness in the tent of David one that judgeth and seeketh justice and is prompt in righteousness.—<sup>6</sup> We have heard of the pride of Moab :

the cities, and dwell in the rocks' (sela). Consul Wetzstein also takes sela collectively ; not however of the rocky region of Petra, but of the more northern defiles which issue in the Dead Sea, especially those of the Arnon, with their perpendicular walls of rock, splendidly adapted for hiding-places. See excursus in 3rd ed. of Delitzsch's Jesaja.

<sup>2</sup> We are not informed whether the counsel in v. 1 was accepted. But, at any rate, the daughters of Moab, i.e., the inhabitants of the various townships (see Ps. xlviii. 11, 'daughters of Judah,') collect with nervous anxiety at the fords of the Arnon—they prepare, that is, to flee in the opposite direction to that indicated in xv. 7. For the simile, comp: Ps. xi: 1; Prov. xxvii: 8.—West] i.e., nestlings; as Deut. xxxii: 11:

<sup>3</sup> <sup>a</sup> An appeal to the humanity of some neighbouring people, apparently the Jews (see v. 1).—Apply counsel] So Kay. Or, 'carry into execution that which has been proposed,' comp. v. 19, xvi. 11 Hebr. (Dr. Weir).—Do the work of an umpire] i.e., interpose in favour of the Moabites, and put down their oppressors.—In the midst of the noon] The glaring Oriental noon, in which it

<sup>5</sup> A throne] We hardly need to ask, Whose throne? 'Kindness and faithfulness,' 'justice and righteousness' are, it is true, the pillars of every divinely prospered king (Prov. xx. 28, xxix. 14), but here we are manifestly in the Messianic region of thought. It is only after judgment has been executed on Assyria, that the ideal king can be confidently expected (ix. 4-7, xi. 1-5, &c.). 'Kindness' is mentioned as the opposite of 'extortion,' 'destruction,' and 'trampling'; 'faithfulness' means a sincerity which inspires confidence.—Seeketh justice] An Isaian phrase, i. 17.

<sup>6</sup> We have heard of Moab's pride . . .] With the largeness of heart which comes of the 'Spirit of prophecy,' the writer has expressed proud exceedingly ! his pride, and his haughtiness, and his overweeningness, the untruth of his pratings. <sup>7</sup> Therefore shall Moab howl for Moab, he shall howl entirely ; for the <sup>8</sup> raisin-cakes of Kir-Hareseth shall ye sigh, utterly downcast. <sup>9</sup> For the fields of Heshbon languish ; the vine of Sibmah—

his firm belief in the ultimate submission and salvation of Moab. But alas ! the reputation of Moab for haughtiness and vain pretentiousness forbids him to hope that its conversion will be immediate. These national characteristics are well illustrated from the inscription on the Moabite Stone. They evidently had a religious basis, Kemosh, the national god, being represented by Mesha as the inspirer of each of his plans and aggressive movements. 'Kemosh said unto me, Go, destroy Israel !'

 A specimen of a not unfrequent tautology arising from the antithetical tendency of Hebrew style. Comp. viii. 18, xxiii. 2, Zech. xii. 6, Gen. xix. 24 (where inattention to this peculiarity has led even Ewald into serious error, History of Israel, ii. 157). — The raisin-cakes Cakes of pressed grapes seem to have been the chief commodity of Kir-Hareseth. The destruction of the vintage cut off this valuable source of profit. There may also be an allusion to the sacrificial feasts at the vintage, as in Hos. iii. 1. Alt. rend. may be fairly justified from Assyrian and Arabic, but is contrary to the use of the same word elsewhere (Hos. iii. 1 same plural form, comp. 2 Sam. vi. 19, Cant. ii. 5). Note the weakened reading of Jer. xlviii. 31, followed by Targ. and Sept. of Isa. — Kir-Hareseth or Kir-Heres (v. 11) ; usually explained as 'brick-fortress,' and identified with Kir-Moab. Prof. E. H. Palmer, however, suggests another meaning. 'Asking one of the Arabs where the Moabite Stone was found, the latter replied that it was "between the two hârithin," i.e., between the two hâriths. . . . On Mr. Palmer's demanding a further explanation, the Arab pointed out the two hillocks upon which the ruined village of Dhibân stands. . . . Nearly all the towns in Moab are built upon similar eminences, and Mr. Palmer found that they are invariably called Hâriths by the Arabs' (Athenæum, August 19, 1871). — Sibmah

 acc. to St. Jerome was nearly 500 paces from Heshbon, which would approximate to the distance of Sûmia, which, with its tombs and ruined vineyard-towers, Conder identifies with Sibmah, (Statement of Pal. Explor. Fund, 1882, p. 9). The place is referred to on the Moabite Stone, l. 13, as Seran (for Seban). It was claimed by the Reubenites, Num. xxxii. 38. — Its choice plants smote. . .
 Such was the strength of the generous wine of Sibmah. Comp. xxviii. 1, Jer. xxiii. 9, and perhaps Ps. lxxviii. 65, and similar expressions in Greek and Latin. The following lines describe the extensive culture of this kind of vine. Its northern limit was Yazer, its eastern the sands of the desert, its southern or western the farther shore of 'the sea,' i.e., the Dead Sea. For the words passed over the sea must surely be taken literally. It was in a fertile nook on the western bank of the Dead Sea that En-gedi, so famous for its vines (Cant. i. 14), was situated. By a stroke of imagination the prophet traces the excellence of these to a Moabitish origin. Jer. xlviii. 32 reads : 'They reached unto the sea of Yazer,' but though they reached—they strayed into the wilderness, its tendrils spread out—they passed over the sea. <sup>9</sup> Therefore I will weep with the weeping of Yazer for the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, O Heshbon and Elealeh, for upon thy fruit-harvest and upon thy vintage the cry hath fallen. <sup>10</sup> And taken away is joy and gladness from the garden-land, and in the vineyards there is no singing, no shouting; the treader treadeth not wine in the presses; the cry have I brought to stillness. <sup>11</sup> Therefore my heart shall sound like the lute for Moab, and my bosom for Kir-Heres. <sup>12</sup> And it shall come the Heb. yām may mean 'reservoir,' (comp. 1 Kings vii. 23), it is more likely that 'the sea (of)' has got in by accident; it is omitted in Sept. of Jeremiah.

<sup>9</sup> The prophet, as a man, cannot but sympathise with the mourning of the Moabites; there is no rhetorical artifice in it (as Calv.).—The cry hath fallen] Here is a striking contrast, implied in a single word. 'The cry' (hidād) is primarily the cheerful, musical note with which the vintagers pressed out the juice of the grapes (v. 10, Jer. xxv. 30, &c.). But here it is the wild shout with which the foe lays waste the fields and vineyards so full of promise, or as it is called in Jer. xlviii. 33, 'a cheer which is no cheer.'

<sup>10</sup> Singing] The word is inaccurate: it means rather a long-toned cry (see lili. 8), the hidād. Comp. Jer. xxv. 30b (a very striking passage).—Have I brought to stillness] 'They are God's words. Amidst all his true and deep human sympathy, the prophet is still delivering a message from God' (Dr. Kay).

tion of the inability of Moab to save himself by supplication to his gods. Indeed, this would be inconsistent with v. 3, in which the Moabites are represented as throwing themselves entirely on the merciful consideration of Judah. The turn of the phrase itself indicates that a few words have fallen out of the text. To render it in the ordinary way ('... he shall not prevail') produces a mere tautology, for it has already been said that Moab's religious efforts are but a 'wearying of himself.' The parallelism, too, requires that as the words 'when he appeareth' are matched by 'and cometh to his high place to pray,' so the words 'when he wearieth himself' should be matched by 'and prevaieth not.' Further, the tender compassion of the prophetic writer for Moab leads us to expect that some happier prospect will be opened than a useless religious ceremony. Lastly, the idea of conversion as resulting from a terrible judgment lies at the very foundation of Old Testament prophecy. See also xix. 24, 25, lxvi. 19-21, Zeph. iii. 8, 9, Jer. xii. 15-17, and especially xlviii. 12, 13, comp. 47. From the latter passage, Ewald has with great sagacity restored what in all probability embodies the sense of the lost apodosis:—'Then shall Moab be ashamed of Kemosh his confidence, and turn unto Jehovah.' Dr. Weir objects that such an insertion is out of harmony with what immediately follows. But i. the epilogue is, according to Ewald, to pass : when Moab appeareth, when he wearieth himself on the high place, and cometh to his sanctuary to pray, * and prevaileth not, [then shall Moab be ashamed of Kemosh and turn unto Jehovah.]—<sup>13</sup> This is the word which Jehovah spoke concerning Moab heretofore. <sup>14</sup> And now Jehovah hath spoken, saying, In three years, as the years of a hireling, shall the glory of Moab be disgraced, with all the great multitude, but the remnant † in a very little while will I bring unto honour.†

not by the same hand as the prophecy, and 2. the epilogue, even without Hoffmann's correction, does not contradict the statement of the inserted passage, that in his extremity Moab (or the remnant of Moab) shall turn to Jehovah.—

The high place] Bāmōth, or 'high places,' is the general term for local sanctuaries among the Canaanitish peoples. The Israelites long persisted in worshipping at them (Kings, passim). The Phœnicians had them also (see the famous eight-lined Inscription of 'Umm-el-Awāmid); and the Moabites, e.g., the stele of King Mesha is called a bāmāh (l. 3, 4).<sup>1</sup> The term is applied not only to the height, whether natural or artificial, on which an altar or sacred pillar was generally speaking erected; but also to the altar or sacred pillar without reference to its position. The stele of Mesha, for instance, was found in a depression between the two hillocks (hārithain, see on v. 7) on which the ruins of Dībān stand, and the Israelites had Bāmōth in the Valley of Hinnom, Jer. vii. 31.

—And prevaileth not] or, 'and is not able' (Ew., Geiger), i.e., is too full of despair to pray; but this seemstoosubtle.—Kemosh] The national god of the Moabites, but also the object of worship to other nations, for the name occurs in a Phœnician inscription found in Sicily (Gesenius, Mon. Phœn., 159), also on a stone found by M. Renan in Phœnicia (Mission de Phénicie, p. 352), and in a Babylonian name B.C. 524 (Oppert, Revue archéologique, sept. 1866, p. 166).

<sup>13</sup> This is the word] So Isaiah, xxxvii. 22.—Heretofore] The phrase is quite vague, and would apply equally well to a much earlier prophecy, or to one of recent date. In Ps. xciii. 2 it is parallel with 'from everlasting,' but in Isa. xlviii. 7 it clearly means simply 'at an earlier period'; comp. xlv. 8, 2 Sam. xv. 34.

<sup>14</sup> And now Jehovah hath spoken . . .] Not 'But now,' as A.V. Isaiah recognises the old prophecy as a true revelation, and here supplements it by fuller details.

—In three years, as the years of a hireling] i.e., speedily; there will be no grace time (see on vii. 16). The same phrase in xxi. 16.

—Shall the glory . . .] Thoroughly Isaianic, see xvii. 3, 4, xxi. 16; also x. 25, xxix. 17. The remnant of Moab, like that of Israel, is the germ of a regenerated people. See on v. 12.

Because he delivered me out of all. . . .

CHAPTER XVII.

THE impending ruin of Syria and Ephraim. At first this calamity is described as leaving nothing behind, but the second comparison leaves a door of escape for at least a remnant of Ephraim. Thus, in the prospects of the future, Isaiah steadfastly refuses to identify Israel altogether with Judah.

The combination of Syria and Ephraim seems unnatural to some critics, but seems explained by the alliance of Syria and Ephraim, referred to in vii. 1. Thus we get the end of the reign of Jotham for a terminus a quo (2 Kings xv. 37); the terminus ad quem is the captivity of Damascus and Samaria (2 Kings xvi. 9, xvii. 6). No allusion being made to the siege of Jerusalem, there is no reason to date the prophecy much after the first-mentioned period. The calmness of its tone contrasts strongly with the impassioned energy of ix. 8-x. 4; this prophecy is evidently the fruit of a more meditative mood.

laid bare') was significant of their fate. It is a short, enigmatical way of expressing what is said in full in Jer. li. 58a (see the Hebrew). Bishop Lowth's and Lagarde's emendations (based on Sept.) are plausible but unnecessary, and efface the characteristic paronomasia 'Arey 'ar'er.

<sup>3</sup> And the fortress . . . ] Having threatened Syria and Israel separately, the prophet now describes their common doom. Their fortresses and independent sovereignty shall cease—the prophet gives the former to Ephraim, and the latter to Damascus, but he means that both losses are experienced in common.—Shall be like the glory . . . ] i.e., like that which is left of the glory of shall they be : an oracle of Jehovah Sabáoth.—<sup>4</sup> And it shall come to pass in that day ; the glory of Jacob shall be enfeebled, and the fatness of his flesh shall become lean. <sup>5</sup> And it shall be as when <sup>4</sup> one gathereth standing corn at harvest,<sup>4</sup> and his arm reapeth the ears ; yea, it shall be as with one who gathereth ears in the valley of Rephaim. <sup>6</sup> And gleanings shall be left thereof, as at the striking of an olive-tree, two or three berries at the uppermost point, four or five on the branches of the fruit-tree ; an oracle of Jehovah, the God of Israel. <sup>7</sup> In that day shall the earth-born look toward his Maker, and his eyes shall have regard to the Holy One of Israel, <sup>8</sup> and he shall not look unto the altars the work of his

the Israelites. The meaning of this is unfolded in the following verses.

<sup>4-6</sup> The immediate prospects of Israel are described under three figures : 1. that of an emaciated body ; 2. that of a harvest field ; and 3. that of beaten olive-trees.

is done.' But the point of comparison is not the 'striking,' but the fewness of the berries remaining to be struck.

<sup>7, 8</sup> The religious revolution brought about by these calamities. —The earth-born] Implying that the Israelites have forgotten the duty which they owe as creatures to the Creator.—The altars] viz., those of the deities next mentioned. Comp. Hos. viii. 11, x. 1, xii. 11. It would be too subtle to see with Lagarde an implied rebuke of Ahaz (2 Kings xvi. 10-13).

<sup>8</sup> The Ashérah] i.e., the symbols of Ashérah, a goddess worshipped by the Canaanites as the giver of fertility and good fortune. The symbol seems to have been a pole or artificial tree (comp. the sacred tree in the Assyrian sculptures) ; see Judg. vi. 25, Deut. xvi. 21, where the word for 'plant' means simply to set into the ground, as Eccles. xii. 11, and comp. the singular rendering of Vulg. 3 Kings xv. 13.—It must be admitted, however, that side by side with the passages in which Ashérah (first letter Aleph) is spoken of as one of the chief deities of Canaan, there are others in smaller number which mention Ashtoreth or the Ashtoreths (first letter Ayin) where we should have expected Ashérah, hands, and that which his fingers have made he shall not regard, and the Ashérah's and the sun-images [<sup>e</sup> he shall break up.<sup>e</sup>] <sup>9</sup> In that day his fortified cities shall be like the deserted places of the Hivites and the Amorites<sup>f</sup> which they deserted before the children of Israel; and it shall become a desolation. <sup>10</sup> For thou didst forget the God of thy welfare, see Judg. x. 6 (comp. iii. 7), 1 Sam. vii. 3, 4, xii. 10. These passages, however, may be due to a later editor, in whose time the distinction between the deities had been forgotten. At any rate, Ashtoreth or Astart seems to have been less popular than Ashérah; in other words, the Canaanites felt more attracted to the feminine side of the Babylonian Istar (the luxurious goddess of sensual love) than to the masculine (the stern god of war), and even the latter they converted into a goddess.—As to the derivation, Ashérah, as Dr. Tiele has pointed out, is probably the feminine of the Canaanitish god Asher = Assy. Asir, 'favourable' (properly 'straight, even, plain,' comp. the Hebrew phrase 'to smooth the face of anyone,' i.e., to sue for his favour), comp. the proper name S'almanu-Asir, 'Salman is kind.' Another form of the same word is Asur or Assur, the name of an Assyrian god and city, and Asurit, an epithet of the goddess Ishtar. Dr. Tiele is inclined to identify Asher and Assur, and the suggestion is well worth considering. It is, however, not absolutely necessary to identify all the deities who received the titles Asher or Ashérah, any more than it is to identify all those who were named Baal.—Against the view that Ashérah is not the name of a goddess, but means 'a pole,' see Last Words, vol. ii., and compare Kuenen's Religion of Israel, i. 88–93, Tiele, Vergelijkende Geschiedenis der oude Godsdiens, i. i. pp. 462–3, 810, Movers, Die Phönizier, i. i. pp. 561–2.—The sun-images] i.e., the figures of Baal Khamman, the sun-god, often spoken of in Phœnician votive inscriptions. (Comp. Hebr. khammah, 'heat,' used poetically for the 'sun.') There is a trace of this cultus in Hammon, the name of a place in N. Palestine, Josh. xix. 28, 1 Chr. vi. 76. In 2 Chr. xxxiv. 4, these figures are mentioned as standing on the altars of Baal. Perhaps they were modifications of the conical stones, which, at any rate, among Turanian peoples, symbolise the generative power of the sun. Comp. Movers, Die Phönizier, i. i. p. 411.—A verb seems wanting at the end of the verse, as Lagarde points out, unless with Stade (see his Zeitschrift 1882, p. 12), we regard the closing words as an intrusive gloss on the foregoing.

<sup>9–11</sup> Here the prophet drops the subject of the Israelitish penitents. In xxviii. 5, it is apparently implied that they were to share the prosperity of the pious kernel of Judah. Of N. Israel in general it is stated that its infidelity shall be punished by a desolation like that which ancient Canaan experienced at the hands of the Israelites.—Deserted places] i.e. ruins. The text reading is generally defended by 2 Chr. xxvii. 4, where mountain, country, and forests, are referred to as the localities of fortresses. See, however, crit. note. The decision is difficult.

<sup>10</sup> The Book . . . ] See on xxx. 29, xxvii. 5.—Plants of Adonis]. Comp. on lxvi. 17. The ordinary rend. does not give a suitable contrast. The Israelites have forsaken and the rock of thy fortress thou rememberedst not; therefore thou didst plant <sup>g</sup> plants of Adonis,<sup>g</sup> and with vine-slips of a stranger didst sow it: <sup>11</sup> in the day of thy planting thou didst make a hedge, and in the morning didst make thy seed to blossom—<sup>h</sup> a harvest-heap <sup>h</sup> in the day of sickness and incurable pain.

vv. 12-14. The sudden destruction of the Assyrian army.<sup>1</sup>—The three last verses of this chapter seem to have no relation to the foregoing prophecy, to which they are joined. It is a beautiful piece, standing singly and by itself; for neither has it any connection with what follows; their Rock (a religious term), therefore they have planted pleasant gardens. Nor does it suit the immediate context. The term 'stranger' in 'vine-slips of a stranger' is most naturally taken as = 'a strange god'; comp. on xliii. 12. We are therefore almost compelled, as Ew. first saw, to explain the parallel word (Hebr. na'amānim) as a Divine title, even if there be no evidence of its being such still extant. There were so many Divine epithets, often used by themselves as Divine names, that it would be no wonder if some had left few traces. But we have some presumptive evidence. There is the proper name Naaman 'the Syrian' (2 Kings v. 1), and its Arabian equivalent, No'mān (the name of a king in Tebriz's scholia to Hamāsa); proper names like these have always a claim to be interpreted as Divine titles, if possible. There is also Nahr Na'mān, the modern Arabic name of the river Belus, near Acco (Acre), which evidently includes a title of the god Baal (elsewhere known as Adoni or Adonis). Lastly, there is a singular Arabic name for the red anemone, given in Lane's magnificent Lexicon, p. 1578, shakdiku-n-no'mān, explained first by Lagarde (following out a hint of Ewald, History, iv. 86) as 'the wounds of Adonis,' and evidently a phrase of primitive origin (hence the word anemone):—Lagarde well compares the αἶμα Ἀδωνῆος (Semitica, p. 32). Classical students will of themselves illustrate Isaiah's phrase by the 'gardens of Adonis' (pots or baskets filled with herbs, which soon withered in the sun, as Adonis was killed by the boar), the proverbial phrase for something which arises quickly, but does not last. First mentioned in Plato's Phædrus, p. 276 b. There is, I think, a similar proverbial application of the Hebrew phrase included in the meaning here. 'How quickly the Adonis-gardens fade! So quickly shall the devotion of the Israelites to false gods end in disappointment!' Such appears to be the thought of the prophet. We thus obtain a trace of Tammuz-worship earlier than (not to mention lxvi. 17) Ezek. viii. 17, or even than Jer. xxii. 18, which probably contains the burden of the Tammuz-dirge.—Sow] Used inexactly for 'plant.'

whether it stands in its right place or not, I cannot say.' I quite agree both with what Bishop Lowth here asserts and with what he suggests. An unforced connection with xvii. 1-11 cannot be produced; and though most recent critics connect these three verses with chap. xviii., the concluding words of v. 14 are decidedly against this; besides which there are no phraseological affinities in vv. 12-14 to chap. xviii., and the former passage describes the ruin of the enemy under an image which is clearly inconsistent with those in chap. xviii. I venture to place this brief but well-rounded prophecy during the victorious march of the corps d'armée which seems to have been detached by Sennacherib from his main army at Lachish to force Judah back into allegiance to Assyria. It seems to have been framed on the rhythmic model of the slightly earlier prophecy, chap. xviii., and is one of the most vigorous and picturesque in Isaiah's works.

<sup>13</sup> Ah, the tumult of many peoples, like the tumult of the seas they are tumultuous; and the uproar of nations, like the roaring of mighty waters they roar! <sup>13</sup> The nations—like the roaring of mighty waters they make an uproar, but he rebuketh it, and it fleeth far away, and is chased like the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like things that are whirled before the hurricane. <sup>14</sup> At eventide, behold terror! before morning, it is gone! This is the portion of those who spoil us, and the lot of those who plunder us.

same prophecy a double application of the figure of harvest, first to the Assyrians 'reaping a harvest of cities and their inhabitants,' and then to the Israelites 'transplanting heathen gods into their worship, and reaping God's abandonment of their nation as the fruit' (Strachey.)

<sup>13</sup> Isaiah on his 'watch-tower' hears, and we seem to hear with him, the ocean-like roar of the advancing Assyrian hosts (comp. Ps. xlv. 3, 6, lxx. 7). Full of sympathetic surprise at the tragic spectacle, he exclaims, Ah! the tumult of many peoples (alluding to the varied composition of the Assyrian army). The particle rendered 'Ah!' has several meanings, and the context must decide which is to be preferred. Del. takes it to be expressive here of indignation (as i. 4, x. 1), and in xviii. 1 of pity (as lv. 1). —He rebuketh it] Obs. how the short clauses crowd upon each other in sharp contrast to the long-drawn-out clauses which precede. So quickly follow the blows of Divine vengeance. The tense in the Hebr. is the perfect or 'fact-tense' as it may be called. The prophet is set free from all personal feeling, and describes the events which loom as it were bodily before him. —It] Or, him; see on v. 26. —The chaff of the mountains] Threshing-floors being usually on high ground, for the sake of the current of wind 1 Sam. xix. 22 Sept., 2 Sam. xxiv. 18, 2 Chron. iii. 1).

<sup>14</sup> The judgment upon the Assyrians is to begin in the evening, and to end before morning in their complete destruction. Comp. xxix. 7, 8, xxxvii. 36. —This is the portion . . .] The solemn judgment of the spectators (comp. Judg. v. 31).

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE sudden destruction of the Assyrians, and the homage of Ethiopia to Jehovah. Such is the prophet's theme, which is worked out in a most picturesque and dramatic way. The king of Ethiopia, stirred by the approach of the Assyrians, is sending messengers in the light river-vessels to spread the news through the empire as rapidly as possible, and to call together the troops. Shabataka, at this time nominally king of Egypt, was really much more of an Ethiopian than an Egyptian prince:—he belongs indeed to the 25th or Ethiopian dynasty. Hence we can account for Isaiah's confining his prophecy to Ethiopia, which would be strange indeed had Egypt been united under a single native king. Isaiah evidently sympathises (as in the case of Merodach-Baladan; see on xxi. 1–10) with Ethiopia's hostility to the general enemy, Assyria, and salutes its people with honourable epithets; but he regards its anxiety as misplaced, for Jehovah is looking on, and will himself interpose at the right moment. Then, he predicts, with a true intuition of the far-reaching consequences of the great event, will the distant lands, united under the sceptre of Ethiopia, recognise the divinity of Jehovah at 'the place of his Name' (comp. 1 Kings iii. 2) and the scene of the great deliverance—Jerusalem.—It is sometimes said (e.g. recently by Mr. Hodgkin) that Tirhakah (Egyptian, Taharaka) is the name of the Ethiopian king referred to; comp. xxxvii. 9. This is against the Egyptian chronology, if Tirhakah reigned from 693 to 666 (Brugsch). We may either suppose the late compiler of xxxvi.–xxxix. to have confounded Shabataka with the better-known Tirhakah, or, with Lenormant, that Tirhakah acted as general against Sennacherib for his royal father.—Possibly Shabataka may have sent an embassy to Jerusalem; this will account for Isaiah's graphic description of the Ethiopians' appearance; only we must not, with Ewald, quote v. 2 in behalf of this theory, as the mention of the Nile-boats confines the scope of the messengers to Ethiopia.<sup>1</sup>—Against the view that the Jews are the nation referred to, which makes the whole prophecy unintelligible, as well as on Mr. Hodgkin's theory, see Last Words, vol. ii.

The prophecy falls into two symmetrical strophes, or paragraphs, each consisting of three verses of four lines or members each, and followed by an epilogue in one verse of five lines.

vii. 18, to the hosts of enterprising Egyptian and Ethiopian warriors. Possibly Isaiah may refer to a particular fly commonly known as the tsetse, but among the Gallas as the tsaltsal, a name which closely resembles the Hebr. word for clangour. This would supply an appropriate symbol for warriors, as it is the most dreaded of all the insects of the interior of Africa. Others have thought of the sacred beetle, so familiar a form in Egyptian symbolism, or of a kind of grasshopper or locust referred to under the name tseldtsal ('clangour') as peculiarly destructive to vegetation in Deut. xxviii. 42 (this has also been identified with the tsetse). Again, seeing that the Hebr. tseldtsal has also the meanings of cymbal and harpoon (= whizzing spear), we may, if we please, render the phrase 'winged cymbals' or 'winged spears' (in either case a fit name for the tsetses). It is the practice in Semitic to add a qualifying word like 'winged,' when a word may be understood in more than one sense (see, e.g., xxxviii. 14, Gen. xxxvii. 31).—Beyond the rivers of Ethiopia] i.e., not only Seba or Meroe (Assyrian Milukkkhi), which is nearly surrounded by rivers, but the country farther to the south, which was under the Ethiopian rule (Del.). The prophet's object is to emphasize the greatness of Ethiopia, which has dominion over such distant countries. The remoteness of Ethiopia seems greatly to have impressed the Hebrew writers, in this early stage of geographical knowledge, see Ps. lxxii. 10, comp. 8.—There is a remarkable allusion to this passage in Zeph. iii. 10.

<sup>a</sup> Heralds] to the various districts of the empire.—The Sea] i.e., the Nile (as xix. 5, Nah. iii. 8, see Pusey), still called el-Bahr, 'the sea.' Comp. Sindhu, 'the sea,' the Sanskr. name of the Indus.—In vessels of papyrus], such as are mentioned under another name in Job ix. 26, comp. Rawlinson's Herodotus (on ii. 96), where a picture of a papyrus-canoe is given; for a modern parallel, see Last Words, vol. ii. Pliny (H. N., vi. 22) represents these ships as crossing the sea to the island of Taprobane (Ceylon), but is evidently misinformed. The word here used for papyrus (gōme) also occurs in Egyptian. The root, however, seems clearly Hebrew ('to absorb'). The native Egyptian name is Sufi.—Go, ye fleet messengers] The speaker may be either Isaiah or the king of Ethiopia, but most probably the former, in accordance with v. 3. The prophet leaves us to guess what he would have the messengers say. The king, their master, doubtless means them to give notice of the danger which threatens the empire, and to call together the available troops. Isaiah tacitly consents to the former part of their message, but not to the latter; for the next verses assure us, Jehovah himself will interpose.—To the nation tall and polished . . .] Why this accumuhowever, nothing in the chapter itself to suggest this date; in particular, there is no allusion to negotiations between Egypt and Ethiopia and the small states of Palestine—negotiations which drew from Isaiah a by no means complimentary description of Egypt (xxx. 7, contrast xviii. 2). It is true, chap. xviii. is placed among prophecies of the reign of Sargon, but this is owing to its subject—the oracles on foreign nations being placed together.

lation of minute features, instead of a simple mention of the name of the Ethiopians? There is perhaps a divine irony in the contrast between the immense preparations of this great and powerful people and the ease with which Jehovah, nullifying all human calculations, will extinguish the pride of Assyria in a single night (Del.). Isaiah, however, does not mean to be contemptuous. All ancient writers agree in their high opinion of the Ethiopians. Isaiah has probably met with ambassadors of this hitherto unknown race, and mentions the points that struck him (comp. Herod. iii. 20, 23, 114).—Polished] alluding to the appearance of the skin of the Ethiopians. Herodotus mentions the same characteristic.—The strong, strong nation and all-subduing] Isaiah doubtless alludes to the Egyptian conquest of Shabaka, the first king of the 25th or Ethiopian dynasty of Manetho, and celebrated for his cruelty to the unfortunate Bokchoris (Egyptian Bokenranf). A tradition of the victories of the Ethiopians has been perpetuated by Megasthenes (Strabo, xv. 1, 6), who couples Tearco (Tirhakah) with Sesostris.—The above rend. is much disputed, but is far the most probable one. The only reasonable doubt relates to the first part of it. McGill and Del., for instance, objecting to an unnecessary ἀνατ' Ἀγυῶν, and to comparing the Arabic, render literally 'a nation of line-line and trampling,' i.e., 'a nation that takes possession of the territories of other nations and subjugates them' (McGill), or taking 'line' in the sense of command (?) as marking out the line of conduct, 'an imperious and victorious nation' (Del., Naeg.). But the reduplication of 'line' seems hardly called for on the former hypothesis, and the meaning given to 'line' by Del. is not sufficiently supported by the stammering speech of the drunkards in xxviii. 10.—Rivers cut through] Comp. Herod. ii. 108: κατερμήθη ἡ Αἴγυπτος (Böttcher). The modern Nubia abounds in rivers and mountain-torrents (comp. on v. 1). Canon Cook, rendering 'have spoiled,' sees an allusion to the neglect into which the dykes and reservoirs of Egypt had fallen (see on xix. 5). But the prophet is not speaking of Egypt, nor is he picturing a period of decline.

<sup>3</sup> Assyria is a hostis humani generis; therefore the whole world is invited to the spectacle of its overthrow.—A signal] This 'signal' is not to be understood as set up by the Ethiopians, on the watch against a sudden irruption of the Assyrians. It is a symbolical expression for the notice, supernaturally given, of the approach of the decisive moment. Comp. xi. 10, 12. For a verbal parallel see xiii. 2.

<sup>4</sup> Explanatory. In the midst of all this excitement, of the Assyrians on the one hand, and of the Ethiopians on the other, Jehovah is calmly waiting till the fruit of Assyrian arrogance is all but ripe. Favouring circumstances are hastening the process (clear heat, &c.), and when perfection seems just within reach, Jehovah will interpose in judgment.—My mansion] Hebr. m'kōn (see on iv. 5).—Clouds of night mist] Not 'clouds of dew,' which is a contradiction in terms. The Hebrew and Arabic tal is 'a copious mist shedding small invisible rain, that comes in rich abundance every night about 12 P.M. in the hot weather when west or north-west winds blow, and which brings intense refreshment to all organised life' (Neil, Palestine Explored, p. 136). Lane hesitates whether to call it rain or dew (Arabic Lexicon, s. v.), but neither conveys a true impression. 'The clouds drop down the tal' (Prov.

'while there are' clouds of night-mist in the heat of the vintage. 'For before the vintage, when the blossom is over, and the bud becometh a ripening grape, he shall cut off the branches with pruning-knives, and the shoots he heweth away. 'They shall be left together to the birds of prey of the mountains, and to the beasts of the land, and the birds of prey shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the land shall winter upon it. 'At that time shall a present be brought unto Jehovah Sabáoth 'from the ' people tall and polished, and from the people terrible ever since it arose, the strong, strong nation and all-subduing, whose land the rivers divide, to the place of the Name of Jehovah Sabáoth, mount Zion.

iii. 20), but this would not be correct of either rain or dew. For the Arabic usage, comp. Kordn, Sur. ii. 267. The vintage may be placed in August and September.

CHAPTER XIX.

THIS prophecy consists of two parts, vv. 1-15 describing the judgment impending ~~over~~ Egypt, vv. 16-25 the results of it. The first part falls into three stanzas or strophes, nearly equal in length; the second into five paragraphs, each beginning with 'In that day.' The first exhibits a prospect of unmingled gloom; the second admits Egypt, upon its conversion to the true religion, and Assyria, to equal privileges with Israel.

There are great difficulties in the right understanding of this oracle. Eichhorn actually denied the authorship to Isaiah altogether; and Ewald, who admits the authenticity, finds a general prolixity and an occasional peculiarity of expression which distinguish the discourse from the other writings of Isaiah. The points of contact with the prophet's acknowledged works are, however, sufficiently numerous (Gesenius, Commentar, p. 594) to justify our adherence to the traditional view with more confidence, it is true, so far as vv. 1-15 are concerned, than with regard to the remainder. But it must still be left an open question whether a disciple of Isaiah has not given the prophecy its present form, working of course on the basis of Isaiah's notes.

The Egyptian and Assyrian inscriptions have thrown great light on the historical references. (1) We have a proclamation of Piankhi Mer-Amon,<sup>1</sup> who in the latter part of the eighth century B.C. united under his sceptre the whole of Egypt and Ethiopia. It appears from this valuable state-paper that the whole of Lower Egypt was divided among rival princes, whose connection with their overlord was merely nominal. One of these, named Tafnekht, revolted, and made himself master of Lower Egypt. Piankhi, in the inscription, recounts how he suppressed the revolt. Still the expression a 'hard lord' (v. 4) does not suit Piankhi, who enjoyed a character for clemency, which was only once stained by his conduct at Memphis (Inscr. line 96). The chief value of his inscription is the evidence which it supplies of the imperfect centralisation of the government of Egypt, and of the civil wars which from time to time resulted. It is clear, however, that many of the petty princes remained in undisturbed possession of their fiefs, so that upon any serious disaster happening to the supreme power, the old evil of anarchy would at once show itself. (2) From inscriptions of Sargon (Smith, Assyrian Canon, pp. 125-6), we learn that in 720 B.C. he defeated Sibakhi (the Egyptian king Shabaka), at the battle of Raphia. It is possible that Isa. xix. was written on the arrival of this news. Isaiah was doubtless sufficiently well acquainted with the previous history of Egypt to know that the loosening of the central authority meant the revival of the local chieftainships and incipient anarchy. He might also well suppose (for of course the 'spirit of prophecy' does not exclude natural means of knowledge) that Sargon would, either now or later, follow up his advantage and display his natural 'hardness' or cruelty in the subjugation of Egypt. All that was revealed to him was that Egypt should be shaken to its centre; the precise time and instrument of this were hidden from him. As a matter of fact, the conquest of Egypt, at least of Upper Egypt,<sup>2</sup> was reserved for Esar-haddon in 672, who divided the country into twenty small tributary kingdoms. (3) It is not impossible that Isa. xix. may refer to this event (the conquest by Esar-haddon)—see Smith, History of Assyria, p. 135; Assurbanipal, pp. 15, 16. If so, it will fall into the old age of Isaiah, who would be about 90 (assuming 762 for his birth-year). We might also ascribe it to a disciple of Isaiah. Either supposition will account for the pale reflection which it gives of the grand Isaianic style.

The Isaianic authorship of vv. 16 (or 18)-25 is questioned. So much at least is self-evident, that they must have been written later than the rest of the chapter:—the prophecy is, from a literary point of view, complete without them, and the tone of prophecy and appendix is entirely different. Of course, Isaiah may have added these verses on a later revision of his works—and indeed we can hardly imagine a more ‘swanlike end’ for a dying prophet; or some later writer—it may be a disciple of Isaiah’s—also in his degree a prophet, may have been their author. We know, as a matter of fact, that prophecy becomes more minute, more circumstantial, the further we go from the age of Isaiah, so that it would not be an audacious conjecture that a prophet considerably more recent than Isaiah made this addition. Grätz suggests the author (or one of the authors) of the latter part of Zechariah (comp. Zech. xiv.), which on purely philological grounds must be separated from the former. Others (Ges., Hitz., Merx, Oort) seem to themselves to discover allusions to the age of the Maccabees, when Judæa was for the time independent, and when Egypt and Syria (here, according to them, called Assyria) were equally powerful. The time of the Maccabees, it is urged, also accounts for the prediction in v. 18, ‘One shall be called Sun-city,’ which was framed (ex hypoth.) in order to justify the erection of a temple at Leontopolis (in the nome of Heliopolis) by Onias IV., about 160 B.C.<sup>1</sup> The successes obtained soon afterwards by the Jews might, it is urged, encourage the formation of such extravagant hopes, and the friendly alliance between the three nations in v. 23 corresponds to the fact related in 1 Macc. x. 51–66 (see Hitzig’s powerful argument, Jesaja, pp. 219, 220).

The verses are no doubt peculiar, but we have no right to ascribe them to the time of the Maccabees simply on the ground of the questionable reading ‘Ir ha-khêres, Sun-city,’ and the questionable interpretation ‘Asshur’ = Syria (see on vv. 18–23). Knobel has already indicated points of contact between the disputed verses and the acknowledged prophecies of Isaiah; nor are the ideas radically inconsistent with those of the acknowledged prophecies of Isaiah (comp. ii. 3, xvi. 12 (?), xviii. 7), though no equally ‘catholic’ passage can be quoted. One feature in the description, moreover, points decidedly to a time when the Deuteronomic laws were not known, or at any rate not observed,—that of the maççebah or pillar unto Jehovah (see on v. 19). Note also that Assyria and Egypt are the powers hostile to Israel in vv. 23–25, as in xi. 11–16.

The site of the Egyptian-Jewish temple is placed by tradition at Tel-el-Yahoodah, ‘the Mound of the Jew,’ about 20 miles from Cairo, on the Suez line; and this is probably correct. See Hayter Lewis in Trans. Soc. Bibl. Arch. 1881, pp. 177–191, and comp. Sayce in Pal. Fund. Quarterly Statement, 1880, pp. 136–8.

great trouble was caused by the neglect of the dykes and reservoirs during periods of civil disorder (cf. Herod. ii. 137). 'The complete overthrow of the Ethiopian dynasty was naturally followed by a recurrence of the old evil, which was at length, after many years, arrested by the energetic measures of Psammetichus, described by Diod. A vivid word-picture of the re-assimilation of the narrow oasis of the Nile to the arid desert which hems it in.

<sup>8</sup> The fisherman's occupation is gone. Fish abounded in the Nile (Herod. ii. 93), and was much eaten (Num. xi. 5). To the priests, however, it was unclean, on the ground of certain sacred legends (Pierret).

tions of Bauer (Classical Museum, vi. 152, &c.).—White cloths] Probably including cotton.

<sup>10</sup> All classes, high and low, are in consternation.—The pillars] Comp. Ezek. xxx. 4, Ps. xi. 3, Gal. ii. 9. (I doubt if the text of the second half of this verse is right.)

vv. 11-15 describe, not merely the perplexity of the Egyptian statesmen when the calamities have come, but the folly which accelerated their coming.—The princes] i.e., the king and his priestly counsellors. 'Books containing magic formulæ belonged exclusively to the king; no one was permitted to consult them but the priests and wise men, who formed a council or college, and were called in by the Pharaoh on all occasions of difficulty.' Cook (note on Ex. vii. 11).—Zoan] The S'an of the present day, with immense heaps waiting to be explored. It was a frontier-city in the Delta (the Greek Tanis), and was sometimes called Rameses, but is not to be confounded with the Rameses from which the Israelites started. In Isaiah's time it was still important, though verging on its decline.—How can ye say unto Pharaoh . . . [ 'With what reason can you boast, as you do, of belonging to a royal class' (the Pharaohs belonging to the priestly class, either by birth or by adoption)?

<sup>12</sup> The first proof of the 'folly' of the wise men. They cannot predict the nature or the course of events in this ominous period. Prediction became a favourite occupation of Egyptian religious writers in the Ptolemæan period (Révillout, Revue égyptologique, 1880, p. 145, &c.), and this may possibly have begun at an even earlier date. Certainly Herodotus tells us of Egyptian oracles. The so-called 'prophets,' however, 'who were generally priests of the temples, had the management of the sacred revenues, were bound to commit to memory the contents of the ten sacerdotal books, and directed the details of ritual and ceremonial according to the prescribed formulæ' (Rawlinson, Egypt, i. 434).

<sup>13</sup> A second proof. They had led Egypt astray by their infatuated conduct of affairs.—Noph] i.e., not the distant Nap or Napata (the Ethiopian capital), but Memphis, the most ancient of all the great cities of Egypt, called in the inscriptions Men-nuf, or 'the good abode.' In Hos. ix. 6 called Moph.—The corner-stone] Applied collectively to the whole priestly class. Comp. Zech. x. 4, Judg. xx. 2, 1 Sam. xiv. 38. The Egyptian word kenbet is applied in the same way. (Renouf, Academy, Jan. 9, 1875).—Tribes] i.e., castes, or rather classes.

fusion is traced to Jehovah.—Mixed] i.e., poured out a drink of mixed ingredients.—A spirit of perverseness] Or, of subversion. The opposite of 'a firm spirit,' Ps. li. 10 (12). Comp. on xxxvii. 7.

<sup>15</sup> The verse is slightly obscure. It either says that neither high nor low will be able to effect anything (taking 'and' = or), or, which better suits 'for Egypt,' that the general disunion will prevent any truly national enterprise (taking 'and' = with, as vii. 1). For the figure, head and tail, &c., see on ix. 14.

<sup>18-25</sup> Promises. The grand subject of this epilogue (with which comp. xxiii. 15-18) is the turn in the fortunes of Egypt consequent upon its submission to Jehovah (so Jer. xlv. 26). The transition is abrupt; we have passed at a bound into the Messianic period. The abruptness might perhaps be an argument against the Isaianic authorship of these verses, were it not (1) for the prophetic custom of representing the final anokardoraris or 'restitution' as following immediately upon the then existing crisis, and (2) for Isaiah's fondness for painting a cheerful background to his gloom-land of Judah shall become a terror unto Egypt; whosoever<sup>b</sup> maketh mention of it, unto him they turn shudderingly,<sup>b</sup> because of the purpose of Jehovah Sabáoth, which he purposeth against it (Egypt).<sup>18</sup> In that day there shall be five cities in

iest descriptions.—The prediction was not altogether devoid even of human verisimilitude. Long ago, under the 18th dynasty (17th cent. B.C.), in consequence of the Syrian campaigns of the Pharaohs, so many Semitic words passed into Egypt that some texts of this period (e.g., the Anastasi papyrus) are scarcely more than half-Egyptian in vocabulary; and apart from this, the population of Lower Egypt, near the frontier, was at least half-Semitic (i.e., Canaanitish), and its idioms, manners, and modes of thought must have constantly influenced those of the pure Egyptians. The political history of Palestine assisted this Semitising process. We know from Jeremiah (xlv. 1) that many Jews found refuge in Lower Egypt after the fall of Jerusalem, and it is a mere accident that we have no earlier notice of similar displacements caused by the Assyrian invasions. One of the towns mentioned by Jeremiah as the seat of a Jewish colony is Migdol, and it appears that this pure Hebrew name had been selected by the Egyptians themselves under the form Maktal. It is noteworthy, too, that one of the names, in the Inscription of Pian-chi, viz, Zadkhiau, is not impossibly the Egyptian form of Zedekiah (so Canon Cook). Comp. De Rougé, Revue archéol. viii. 127, &c.; Brugsch, History of Egypt, chap. xi.; Maspero, Rev. arch., 1878, p. 168, Histoire ancienne, prem. éd., p. 338.

<sup>18</sup> Five cities in the land of Egypt . . . ] Is this to be taken literally? Vitrिंगa and Hitzig think so; and it is quite true that the Heliopolite nome continued to be inhabited by Jews till a late period, one evidence of which is the name Tel-el-Yahoodeh given to various mounds besides that referred to above. But it would be strange if a prophecy which begins with such an absence of prosaically minute predictions (comp. Naeg. on vv. 2-4) should close with such remarkably circumstantial anticipations. If, therefore, v. 18 is to be taken literally, we shall have to accept the theory that the passage (and all belonging to it) is a later addition. It is well known, however, that five, the half of ten, was a favourite round number both with the Egyptians (see Ebers. on Gen. xliii. 34) and with the Jews (xxx. 17, xvii. 6, Lev. xxvi. 8, 1 Cor. xiv. 19). The prophet may therefore only mean that there shall be a number, just large enough to be appreciable, of Egyptian civic communities (not merely Hebrew colonies, as Lenormant, see end of verse), speaking the tongue of Canaan (i.e., Hebrew, see on xxxvi. 11). These latter words probably mean that Hebrew shall become the language of sacred forms and ceremonies in these 'five cities,' which of course would be the natural result of their conversion to Jehovah (comp. Zech. xiv. 9). Granting, therefore, that the expectation of conversions on a large scale to the true religion is in harmony with the rest of the acknowledged prophecies of Isaiah, there is nothing in the form of this verse to preclude its Isaianic origin.—Swearing to Jehovah Sabáoth ] Not 'swearing by' (as lxv. 16), but 'swearing (fidelity) to' (as xlv. 23).—One shall be named ] A phrase which constantly introduces a title descriptive of character; see i. 26, iv. 3, lx. 14, lxii. 4. If, however, we read the following words, 'City of the sun,' this cannot be its intention here; we must take it as simply equivalent to 'shall be.'

the land of Egypt, speaking the tongue of Canaan, and swearing to Jehovah Sabáoth; one shall be named °City of destruction.<sup>o</sup> <sup>19</sup> In that day there shall be an altar to Jehovah in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar by its border to Jehovah; <sup>20</sup> and it shall be for a sign and a witness to Jehovah

* So most MSS. and editions, Massora (but see Geiger, Urschrift, p. 79), Peshito. City of the sun, 15 MSS. in text, 1 in marg. (Kenn., and de Rossi), Symm., Vulg., Saad., Talmud ('Menachoth, 110a), Rashi, Vitruv., Ges. (Thesaurus, but not Comm.), Hitz., Naeg. City of righteousness, Sept., Geiger.

But where is there an analogy for this? — [City of destruction] There is great doubt whether the reading should be 'Ir ha-héres' (adopted here), or 'Ir ha-khéres' 'City of the sun.' The main objection to the latter is that it is not at all suitable for a honorific title conferred by a Jewish prophet. An Assyrian might have written thus (comp. R. P., ix. 24), but not a Jewish prophet. The attempts that have been made to provide a better meaning for 'Ir ha-khéres' are extremely rash.—The text-reading has been well explained by Targ., which has 'the city of Bethshemesh (=the house of the sun) which is to be laid waste.' In other words, the prophet intends Heliopolis, but modifies the form of the first letter to indicate the pious zeal for the religion of Jehovah which shall one day inspire its Egyptian inhabitants. It is as if he would say, No longer 'city of the false god of the sun,' but 'city of the breaking down of idolatrous altars.' (It is the word used for Gideon's breaking down of the altar of Baal, Judg. vi. 25.) Comp. Jer. xliii. 13, 'He shall break the (idolatrous) pillars of the house of the sun,' i.e., the great temple in Heliopolis. A similar allusive transformation of the native Egyptian name An (pronounced by the Jews On) is made by Ezekiel (xxx. 17), 'The young men of Aven (= "nothingness," or "wickedness") shall fall by the sword.' So Secker (ap. Lowth), Caspari, Herzfeld, Drechsler, Del.

<sup>19</sup> A further development of v. 18. The 'five cities' shall erect an altar to Jehovah. It is not quite certain how this is to be understood. It depends on our decision of certain preliminary questions. If Isaiah wrote these verses, and if Deuteronomy was written after his time, the altar may have been intended as an altar of sacrifice, in accordance with the primitive law in Ex. xx. 24 (Q. P. B.). If, however, these verses were written after the composition of Deuteronomy (whether Mosaic or not), then we must suppose that the altar was merely an 'altar of witness,' on the principle set forth in Josh. xxii. 23, 24. Or again, the description may be purely symbolical. For this we have a striking analogy in Mal. i. 11, which describes how 'in every place' among the Gentiles 'incense is offered unto the name of Jehovah, and a pure meal-offering,' where the symbolical meaning is indicated by the context.—[And a pillar by its border] In primitive times a pillar (Heb. maççebah) was the distinguishing mark of a holy place. Idolatrous pillars were commanded to be destroyed (Ex. xxiii. 24), but most critics think that 'pillars' to Jehovah were quite allowable till the time of Hezekiah or Josiah, to which they assign the Book of Deuteronomy (comp. Deut. xvi. 21, 22). At any rate, the prophet gives an implicit sanction to the erection of a sacred pillar in Egypt. 'By its border,' to indicate that the whole land belonged to Jehovah.

<sup>20</sup> The altar and obelisk are a sign and a witness to God as well as to man, viz., of the covenant now existing between Jehovah and his sworn servants (v. 18), the

Sabáoth in the land of Egypt: when they shall cry unto Jehovah because of oppressors, he shall send them a deliverer and an advocate, and shall rescue them. <sup>21</sup> And Jehovah shall make himself known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know Jehovah in that day, and shall serve with sacrifice and offering, and shall vow a vow unto Jehovah, and shall perform it. <sup>22</sup> And Jehovah shall smite Egypt, smiting and healing; and when they return unto Jehovah, he shall receive their supplications, and shall heal them. <sup>23</sup> In that day there shall be a highway from Egypt to Assyria; Assyria shall come into Egypt, and Egypt into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians. <sup>24</sup> In that day shall Israel be a

Egyptians. Hence, if some great or petty king should again attempt to 'oppress' Egypt, Jehovah will send a 'deliverer,' as he does to his ancient people (same word in Judg. iii. 9, 15, iv. 3, Obad. 21).

<sup>21</sup> And Jehovah shall make himself known . . . ] Especially by answering their prayers (v. 20). They on their side recognise him for their God by offering sacrifice—whether on the altar mentioned in v. 20, or at Jerusalem, is not stated; but the latter is suggested by the parallel passage, Zech. xiv. 16–19. Obs., the 'five cities' have here expanded into 'the Egyptians.' Possibly the former were the 'remnant' which survived God's terrible visitation, and was to become the 'seed' of a regenerate nation (comp. vi. 13).

<sup>22</sup> The prophet returns to the period of calamity which is to precede the conversion of the Egyptians. Egypt shall be smitten, but with a view to its being healed. For the antithesis, comp. Deut. xxxii. 39, Hos. vi. 1, Job v. 18, and for the important idea thus expressed, Zeph. iii. 8, 9, Jer. xii. 15–17.

<sup>23</sup> The first consequence of this wonderful conversion is the cessation of war between the once rival countries of Egypt and Assyria. The mention of Assyria confirms the view that the 'hard lord' is an Assyrian king.—Of course, this prophecy presupposes that the Assyrians have also been converted (see on x. 20), and one cannot help regretting that no more distinct revelation on the subject is still extant.—A highway] i.e., an uninterrupted passage through Palestine. — The Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.] The sense of the word rendered 'serve' is clear from v. 21. No Israelite could misunderstand the phrase any more than the term 'knowledge' for 'knowledge of Jehovah' in Hos. iv. 6. To render, therefore, with Hitzig, 'Egypt shall (resign itself to) serve Assyria' (or, as he explains it, Syria), is arbitrary, though Sept., Targ., Pesh., Vulg., thoughtlessly give this rendering. How could there be an empire, whose head in political matters was Assyria, and in religious Judea? A strange retrogression of the Messianic belief!—Hitzig's explanation of Asshur as = Syria is without authority. No doubt Asshur could be and was used of a power which succeeded to the place of Assyria, such as Persia (see Ezra vi. 22), but not of an inferior power, such as Syria. In Ps. lxxxiii. 8 (9) Assyria cannot = Syria, because it is only mentioned in the second degree of Israel's enemies ('Assyria also,' are the Psalmist's words). Lagarde, moreover, plausibly reads, not Asshur, but Geshur.

third to Egypt and to Assyria, even a blessing within the earth, <sup>25</sup> <sup>d</sup> forasmuch as <sup>d</sup> Jehovah Sabáoth hath blessed him, saying, Blessed is my people Egypt, and the work of my hands Assyria, and mine inheritance Israel.

ing to complete the harmony, viz., Israel. These three, Egypt, Assyria, Israel, have been divinely prepared to become a blessing within the earth ('within,' i.e., 'within the entire compass of,' not merely 'in the midst of'—blessing is to stream forth from them in all directions, comp. Gen. xii 26, 36).

<sup>25</sup> Hath blessed him] viz., each of the three countries. Obs. Israel, as the central point of 'blessing,' still retains a certain pre-eminence. He is Jehovah's 'inheritance'—the phrase does not occur again till the second part of Isaiah (xlvi. 6, lxiii. 17), as Dr. Weir points out.

CHAPTER XX.

ISAIAH, in the habit of a captive, a sign for Egypt and Palestine.

The renascence of Egyptian prosperity under Shabaka (the So, or rather Seve, of 2 Kings xvii. 4) was but of short duration. The disastrous battle of Raphia (B.C. 720) not only compelled 'Rahab,' the Insolent One, to acknowledge the supremacy of Assyria, but again destroyed the dream of Egyptian unity. Tanis, Bubaste, Khnensa, and Sais, each became the residence of a petty king; Shabataka, the son of Shabaka, was forced to content himself with Thebes and the 'nomes' in its immediate vicinity.<sup>1</sup>

It was not likely that so disunited a country could be of any real use to Judah. And yet it appears from this chapter, compared with chaps. xxx., xxxi., that negotiations were actually entered into between the courts of Palestine (especially that of Judah) and those of Egypt. The danger from Assyria must indeed have been urgent to have suggested so precarious an auxiliary, and Isaiah, whose faith in Jehovah kept him free from all political illusions, lost no opportunity of counteracting such a policy. The special occasion of the prophecy in chap. xx. is revealed to us by the Assyrian inscriptions. Two different texts<sup>2</sup> relate to the siege of Ashdod here so briefly referred to; according to one (the Kouyunjik inscription), it happened in the ninth year of the reign of Sargon, i.e., B.C. 711; according to another (the Annals), in the eleventh, i.e., B.C. 709. It is certain, however, that the siege was the consequence of a change of political parties in the town of Ashdod. A temporary advantage had been given to the Assyrian party by the interference of Sargon, who, some time after the battle of Raphia, deposed the rightful king Azuri, on a charge of rebellion, and enthroned his brother Akhimit in his place. The ruling class, however, were predominantly anti-Assyrian, and deposed

Akhimit, setting up one Yavan as king. The consequence was the siege of Ashdod referred to by Isaiah, which ended in the deportation of the inhabitants to Assyria.—The same cylinder-inscription which relates the siege of Ashdod gives a list of the nations which incurred the same guilt of treason, and among them appears the name of Judah (see on v. 6).

Thus Isaiah had good reason, on political as well as religious grounds, to debort the Jews from an Egyptian alliance. His ill success was revenged by the invasion and subjugation of Judah, to which I have referred in the introduction to x. 5–xii. The conquest of Egypt, however, which Isaiah here holds out in prospect, did not immediately take place. The war with Merodach-Baladan, king of Babylon, prevented Sargon from invading Egypt, and the nominal king of Egypt and Ethiopia (Shabataka), sent an embassy to Sargon desiring peace.<sup>1</sup>

It seems to me very doubtful whether vv. 1, 2 can have been written by Isaiah, as v. 1 implies a confusion of two distinct sieges of Ashdod (see on v. 3). The former reminds us strongly of chap. vii. Both chapters have probably been worked up on the basis of notes of Isaiah's prophecies, and some historical traditions of the life and acts of Isaiah.

<sup>1</sup> In the year when the Tartan came to Ashdod, when Sargon king of Assyria sent him (he warred against Ashdod and took it), <sup>2</sup> at that time spoke Jehovah by Isaiah son of Amoz, saying, Go and loose the sackcloth from off thy loins, passage supplements Sargon's own account of the siege, for this king, in accordance with the Assyrian custom, takes the credit of the capture of Ashdod to himself. (R. P., vii. 40, ix. 11).

<sup>2</sup> The sackcloth] He means the haircloth which the prophets, like the later Christian ascetics, adopted as their habitual dress. Comp. 2. Kings i. 8, Zech. xiii. 4. The phrase 'to gird sackcloth' implies that it was worn as an outer garment. 'Naked' means without this outer garment (1 Sam. xix. 24, Am. ii. 16, Mic. i. 8, John xxi. 7). On the practical impressiveness of such an act in Jerusalem, see Sir E. Strachey's excellent remarks, Jewish History and Politics, p. 114. Micah (i. 8) performed a similar symbolic act. His words 'I will go stripped and naked' suggest that the appearance of the prophet is typical of the enforced 'nakedness' destined for his people.

and take thy shoe from off thy foot: and he did so, going naked and barefoot. <sup>3</sup> And Jehovah said, according as my servant Isaiah hath gone naked and barefoot <sup>4</sup> three years for a sign <sup>5</sup> and an omen against Egypt and against Ethiopia, <sup>6</sup> so shall the king of Assyria lead the captives of Egypt and the exiles of Ethiopia, young men and old, naked and barefoot and with buttocks uncovered, a shame for Egypt. <sup>7</sup> And men shall be dismayed and ashamed because of Ethiopia their expectation and Egypt their ornament. <sup>8</sup> And the in-

<sup>3</sup> The act is symbolic—the only recorded instance of the sort (as chap. vi. is the only recorded vision) in the works of Isaiah. Two difficulties have to be resolved. First, as to the historical character of the act related here. Some (e.g., Kuenen, Onderzoek, ii. 76) think that it is not historical, but an imaginative embodiment of the idea of captivity, and take the same view of the similar episodes in Hosea, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. But we ought rather to consider each case separately; and there is, I think, a special inappropriateness in ascribing such a procedure to a prophet like the 'royal' Isaiah. The second difficulty relates to the duration of the sign. Some critics, ancient as well as modern, have found it difficult to believe that so strange a spectacle should have been exhibited for three whole years. Hence, according to some (but see xxix. 10 Heb.), the Massoretes have put a stop (Atnakh) after the word for 'barefoot,' in order to make the second part of the verse run 'for three years a sign.' Vittr. (doubtfully), Del., Kay, and Stade adopt this view, and Vittr. further conjectures virtually that the text originally ran thus, 'As my servant Isaiah hath gone naked and barefoot three days, for three years a sign,' &c., which he supports by the observation that τρία ἔτη is twice expressed in the Sept. This latter view (approved by Lowth) is at any rate better than the supposition that Isaiah performed the symbolic act only once; a single act of this kind would have been at most a nine days' wonder. The difficulty is entirely caused by a preconceived notion as to what was proper conduct for Isaiah. Apart from this, no one would have entertained a doubt that 'three years' belongs naturally to 'hath gone' and not to 'a sign.'—A greater difficulty than that of the 'propriety' or 'impropriety' of a three years' 'sign' of this kind arises from the Annals of Sargon, which show that the (final) siege of Ashdod lasted only a part of a year (see Smith, Assyrian Canon, p. 129). The true solution, I think, is that the three years are to be counted from the rebellion of Azuri (see Introd.). There were, in fact, two sieges of Ashdod, one issuing in the deposition of Azuri, the other in the captivity of the whole people of Ashdod, and these are fused together in the compendious statement of v. 1—And Jehovah said] i.e., at the end of the three years.

<sup>5, 6</sup> The application. The fulfilment of the sign will radically cure the men of Palestine of their inveterate confidence in Egypt. See Last Words, vol. ii.—This region] The reference is dispute. Chwolson, rendering 'yonder island,' thinks of Cyprus (comp. Jer. xxv. 22), which submitted to Sargon in his eleventh campaign, see Jüd. Zeitschr., 1872, p. 306; Knob., ren-

It seems to me that all the small populations of Palestine are intended, which, in the hope of Egyptian assistance, had revolted or were conspiring to revolt from Assyria. Comp. Sargon's statement, that 'the people of Philistia, Judah, Edom, and Moab, dwelling [who dwell] beside the sea, bringing [who bring] tribute and presents to Assur my lord, were speaking treason' (Smith, Assyrian Canon, p. 130). To those who adopt the rendering 'this sea-coast' the parallel expression used by Sargon will have special force. Comp. Ewald, History, i. 215.

CHAPTER XXI.

VERSES 1-10. The fall of Babylon ; the 'vision' which announced it, and its effect upon Isaiah.—We must again digress into the province of the 'higher criticism,' as the exegesis depends more than usual on the age of the prophecy. Very many moderns, and the present writer himself formerly, have found the date in the Babylonian exile, and not without reasons of striking plausibility. In the first place, it should be observed that the prophet writes in the style and with the fervour of a contemporary, and that the only siege of Babylon with which students of Isaiah have (until lately) been acquainted is that at the close of the Exile. Next, the mention of Elam and Media agrees with the fact that Cyrus, born king of Elam (see Essay x.), conquered the Medes before attacking Babylonia, and the picture of the capture of Babylon during a banquet reminds us of Belshazzar's feast in Dan. v. (comp. Herod. i. 191 end). Nothing but a strong sense of the exegetical difficulties prevents me from still adhering to the modern theory, together with a suspicion that chap. xxi. 1-10 hangs together with chap. xxii. (see Introd.). The difficulties referred to are—1. the tone of strong depression in which the prophet announces his tidings (vv. 3, 4, 10), and the absence of anything even distantly resembling revenge ; 2. the form of the second part of the prophecy, which seems to me to presuppose distance from Babylon ; and 3. the fact that both ideas and phraseology are in harmony with the authorship of Isaiah : compare v. 1 with xxx. 6 ; v. 2 with xxxiii. 1 ; v. 5 (Hebr.) with xxii. 13 (Hebr.) ; v. 6 with viii. 11, xviii. 4, xxi. 16, xxxi. 4 ; (rekeb) vv. 7, 9 with xxii. 6 ; v. 10 with xxviii. 28 and 22. These latter phenomena seem considerably to weaken the strength of the case for a date at the end of the Exile. Let it be observed further, 1. That the description of the capture of the city during a revel is pictorial and imaginative, not predictive; 2. that Isaiah gives Elam an equally prominent place in a besieging army in xxii. 6, and that even if he does not mention Media elsewhere, yet this country was not beyond his horizon (see on xiii. 17), and, 3. that Assyrian researches have revealed not less than three sieges of Babylon in the lifetime of Isaiah, viz., in 710 by Sargon, and in 703 and 691 by Sennacherib<sup>1</sup> (see G. Smith's Assyria, pp. 107, 110, 123). It is no longer adventurous to propose the view that Isaiah himself may be the writer, and that he may refer to some one of these three sieges; but to which? The language of v. 9 rather suggests the last of the three, the issue of which is thus described by Mr. George Smith: 'Babylon was now wholly given up to an infuriated soldiery; its walls were thrown down, its towers demolished, its people given up to violence and slavery, the temples rifled, and the images of the gods brought out and broken in pieces' (Assyria, p. 123; comp. Sennacherib's Bavian inscription, R. P., ix. 126). The objection to regarding this siege (or that in 703) as the subject of the prophecy is that the Elamites (who were now in alliance with the Babylonians) had been in a state of revolt from Assyria from the very accession of Sennacherib. We can hardly imagine that this was unknown to Isaiah; in fact, there was a presumption against any of the tributary nations persisting in their allegiance when the murder of Sargon had given the signal for revolt.

I conclude, then, that the siege of Babylon in 710 is not improbably that referred to. Sargon did not indeed destroy the captured city, but he tells us himself that he 'made to shake the entrails of the town of Bel and of Merodach' ('Annals of Sargon,' by Oppert, R. P., vii. 46). I am not embarrassed by the want of a more minute fulfilment, since the phenomena of prophecy do not justify me in requiring it. The prophecy, thus understood, both illustrates and is illustrated by the narrative in chap. xxxix.

The king of Babylon at the time of this siege (and also in 703) was Merodach-Baladan, who, as we know from xxxix. 1 (= 2 Kings xx. 12), sent an embassy to Hezekiah. His immediate interests, in fact, were identical with those of Hezekiah, with whom he probably desired to form an alliance, and who responded to his wishes so far at least as to exhibit all his treasures and his armour. This helps us to understand the depression with which Isaiah announces his revelation. Although he recognised, as a prophet, the divine necessity of Babylon's fall, he must, at any rate, have known, and have grieved from a human point of view to know, that it was an event of evil omen for still weaker kingdoms. It is true, the king of Elam was at this time favourably disposed to Merodach-Baladan, which is at first sight inconsistent with the summons, 'Go up, O Elam' (v. 2). But we may reply—1. that Isaiah need not have been minutely acquainted with the then shifting political relations of Elam and her neighbours; 2. that as a matter of fact the Elamites were not all either able or willing to support their king in the line he wished to adopt

(see R. P., vii. 44, 45); and 3. that part of Elam appears to have been annexed to Assyria by Sargon in 721 (R. P., vii. 29).

The above view is identical with that of Dr. Paul Kleinert, Theolog. Studien und Kritiken, 1877, pp. 174-79. It should be added that the late Mr. George Smith also before him referred this prophecy to Sargon's conquest of Babylon (T. S. B. A., ii. 329). The evidence in its favour is exegetical, and will therefore not command universal assent. For my own part, I gladly admit that a fuller knowledge of the circumstances of the Jews might conceivably enable us to reconcile the prophecy with a date at the close of the Exile. Let the other side as willingly acknowledge the remarkable contrast pointed out long ago by De Wette between this prophecy and the rest of the group which relates to Babylon.

<sup>1</sup> Utterance . . .] An enigmatical title, reminding us of the titles of prophecies in v. 11, xxii. 1, xxx. 6. The sense is probably that Babylonia was to become a marshy desert (comp. xiv. 23), 'the sea' being a name given to the Euphrates for a similar reason as to the Nile in xvii. 2, xix. 5; comp. Herod. i. 184, where it is said that, before Semiramis, the river used to make a sea of the whole plain. The Assyrians, too, called S. Chaldaea 'the sea-land' (Schrader, K. A. T., p. 353). In Jer. li. 36 (comp. l. 38) Babylon's 'sea' is again referred to, and threatened with being dried up.—In the southland] i.e., in the south of Judah, called by the special topographical name Negeb, 'dry country.' For these 'tempests,' see Zech. ix. 14, Job xxxvii. 9, i. 19, Hos. xiii. 15, Jer. iv. 11, xiii. 24. Comp. also Layard's description of the violent whirlwinds of Babylonia and Susiana: 'They could be seen as they advanced from the desert, carrying along with them clouds of sand and dust. Almost utter darkness prevailed during this passage' (Nineveh and its Remains, chap. v.).—

It cometh from the wilderness] Babylonia was bordered on the S.W. by the Arabian desert. There is no ~~cuneiform~~ evidence that any invasion of Babylon was made from the S.W.; but why should we insist on a literal historical fulfilment? It is a grand poetical symbol which we have before us.—Terrible land] Comp. xxx. 6, Deut. viii. 15.

<sup>2</sup> Hard] i.e., calamitous, as 1 Kings xiv. 6.—Vision] i.e., revelation.—The barbarous dealer] i.e., the Assyrian army. The Hebr. bôged is strictly one who deals faithlessly: then, one who has no regard for the law of humanity.—a barbarous conqueror (as xxxiv. 16, xxxiii. 1).—Elam] The Elamites had been made tributary by Sargon in 721 (R. P., vii. 29, comp. 41).—Media] The Median conquests of Assyria had begun long before Sargon (see on xiii. 17).—Sighing] i.e., the 'sighing' caused by Babylon—if the text be correct. But the verb 'to still' rather suggests a noun, such as 'jubilation' (xvi. 10), or 'arrogance' (xiii. 11).

loins are filled with anguish ; pangs have taken hold of me, like the pangs of a woman in travail : I writhe so that I cannot hear : I am alarmed so that I cannot see. <sup>4</sup> My heart beateth ; terror hath frightened me ; the evening of my pleasure he hath turned for me into trembling. <sup>5</sup> Preparing the table ! <sup>a</sup> spreading the coverlet (?) ! <sup>b</sup> eating, drinking ! <sup>5</sup> Preparing the table . . .] Historical infinitives, vividly depicting the arrogant security of the Babylonians. They are dancing and revelling at a banquet. Suddenly the feasting is interrupted by the announcement that the walls have been stormed, and that the palace itself is in danger. It is plausible, though (see Introd.) not necessary, to connect this description with 'Belshazzar's feast,' which appears (comp. Dan. v. 4 and note in Essay x.) to have had primarily a religious character, whereas this feast is apparently nothing but a court-revel.—Spreading the coverlet] i.e., either the cloth on which the viands are set, or the coverings of the seats of the banqueters. This rend. suits the context best, and accounts best for the article, but is far from certain.—Anoint the shield] They had not even prepared their shields for battle—so confident were they ! The 'anointing' was mainly in order that the weapons of the enemy might glide off them.

<sup>6-7</sup> Explanatory of vv. 2-5. Isaiah feigns that he has been directed by Jehovah to set a watchman, but the watchman is really himself. The prophet, as Ewald points out, has, as it were, a double personality, and discharges two separate functions at the same moment. He is at once a 'watchman,' intent upon every indication of the Divine will, and the prophet who listens to the report (somewhat as a man who dreams). Here Isaiah wishes to make it clear that it was no political calculation of his own, but a warning from above, which gave him the certitude of Babylon's fall. Hence his fiction. Hab. ii. 1 is closely parallel.—It seems to me easier to understand the passage about the 'watchman,' if written at Jerusalem, than as the work of an exile in Babylon.—Unto me] Added for emphasis, as in v. 16 (Isaiah's), viii. 11, xxxi. 4.

vv. 11, 12. A short, vague, and difficult prophecy. Is it in prophetic imagination that Isaiah hears a call from Seir? or did the Edomites really consult the prophet of Jehovah, as Ahaziah consulted Baalzebub, the god of Ekron? or has a word fallen out of the text, which, together with a slight emendation, would perhaps make the applicants Simeonitish fugitives in Seir (1 Chr. iv. 42, 43), sounding Isaiah as to their restoration to the rights of citizenship? <sup>1</sup> The first seems to me the right view, as most in harmony with the heading and with the position of the prophecy. It is 'in the spirit' that Isaiah hears the question of the Edomites. Perhaps they had already suffered some great reverse; the reading of the three Greek versions may be correct, and may be thus explained. I would assign the prophecy to the reign of Sargon, by whom (see on xx. 5, 6) Judah and Edom are brought under a common accusation of seditious plotting. In Sennacherib's time the Edomites paid tribute to Assyria.

they were sometimes employed in the Assyrian army.—He hearkened] viz., for a Divine revelation. The prophet knows that the king of Assyria has taken the field against various rebellious peoples, but for some time his inner ear catches no tidings affecting the interests of Judah. Hence, the imaginary watchman cried (as) a lion (v. 8), 'with a deep groan of impatience.' His cry is addressed to Jehovah ('O Lord'); thus we have a key to the allegoric fiction. The prophet is the watchman, and he is set by Jehovah (Ezek. xxxiii. 7).

<sup>9</sup> And behold . . .] Just as the watchman had uttered his complaint, the answer came. He saw a troop of men riding, in pairs, and coming from Babylon. Then all at once it dawns upon him with prophetic certitude that Babylon has fallen. As a prophet of Jehovah, he cannot but rejoice at the signal blow thus inflicted on idolatry, but at the same time he recognises, as a citizen, the pain which the news must give to his own people.

<sup>10</sup> O my threshed . . .] 'O Israel, who hast lately suffered so much from the cruel Assyrian invaders (under Sargon, see on x. 5, &c.), how gladly would I have brought thee more cheering tidings, news of the success of the rebellion against Assyria, but I can but wait upon my office. That which I have heard . . . I have announced unto you.' The prophet clearly vv. 13-17. This prophecy must have been written rather later than the foregoing. War had already reached the powerful tribe of the Dedanites, and forced their caravans to take flight. Within a year, says the prophet, the other tribes of Arabia shall share the same fate. Sargon relates how Samsie, queen of mat Aribi, brought him tribute (R. P. vii., 34).

But he suggests the only trustworthy source of comfort—viz. that He who doeth all this is 'the God of Israel.'—Threshed (or, trodden) and winnowed one (lit., son of my floor)] So of the later kingdom of Babylon when approaching its end, Jer. li. 33. It must be remembered that threshing was performed either by oxen treading out with the feet (so Hos. x. 11), or with iron wains (xxviii. 28, xli. 15, Am. i. 3, Mic. iv. 12).

<sup>11</sup> Utterance of Dumah] Adumu in the Assy. inscriptions is the capital of mat Aribi (Arabia), and Yákût, the great Arabic geographer, mentions several places called Dûma (though none in the mountains of Seir). Probably, however, none of these towns is referred to, but Edom (Assyr. Udumu). The title has a mystic meaning (comp. xxi. 1), and alludes (Dumah = 'silence') to the desolation in store for Edom. In the Hebr. of Ps. xciv. 17, cxv. 17, Dumah = Hades. —What part of the night?] The first, second, or third watch? Will the light soon dawn?

<sup>12</sup> Morning cometh and also night] An enigmatical reply in the style of that 'wisdom' which the neighbouring peoples, and not least the Edomites (Obad. 8), loved. Various interpretations have been given. I quote two from Dr. Weir: 'The dawn shall certainly come, but also night; i.e., either the light promised is not to endure always, but to be followed by another and perhaps another period of darkness (contrast lx. 19, 20, and especially Zech. xiv. 7), or that which is morning to some is darkness to others.' I prefer the former. The prophet sees a short day of prosperity followed by a night of trouble. But the text may be incomplete; see crit. note.—If ye would inquire (or, seek) . . . ] 'If ye would have fuller information, ye may come and ask again. This is all that has yet been revealed to me.' Dr. Kay (following Jerome) thinks 'seek' means 'seek Jehovah,' and 'return, come' = 'repent' (comp. Jer. iii. 22), and so partly Dr. Weir. It may be so, but the sister prophecy in vv. 13-17 says nothing of the kind, and 'Jehovah' would hardly have been omitted.

<sup>13</sup> Utterance 'in the evening'] The words 'in the evening' have been adopted from the sequel by the Hebrew editor as a title (similar cases in xxii. 1, xxx. 6). The whole inscription is wanting in most MSS.

In the evening] There are two objections to the reading of the vowel-points—one bad and one good. The bad one is that the name Arabia had not arisen as early as Isaiah (Ewald), whereas it occurs under the form Aribu (= N. Arabia, or a part of it) in inscriptions of Shalmaneser and Sargon; the good one is that the limitation 'in Arabia' would be rather superfluously addressed to the Dedanites. ## CHAPTER XXII.

VERSES 1-14. A prophecy of judgment upon Jerusalem. It is not easy to seize the right point of view for explaining it. After much fluctuation, these are the results to which the study of the prophecy as a whole has led me. In the two opening verses the prophet assumes the attitude of a stranger, and inquires the cause of the crowd on the roofs and the boisterous merriment. How strangely ill-timed! For a part of the population has perished by pestilence, while the warriors have either fled or been taken prisoners. It is a calamity little short of the destruction of the nation, and the prophet gives himself up to sorrow (v. 4). True, Jerusalem is still uncaptured, but the seer on his watch-tower foretells that it will not long continue so. A picture unrolls itself before him of tumult and consternation at the troops of fierce soldiery pouring in. v. 6 begins a new section.<sup>1</sup> The prophet transports himself mentally to the first appearance of the Assyrian army, and recalls the measures of defence hastily taken by the citizens. In v. 12 he describes a state of things which began in the past ('in that day'), but reaches into the present. Though misfortune has thus been closing in upon them, the people of Jerusalem have shut their ears to the preaching of repentance. With despair in their hearts, they endeavour to drown thought in sensual pleasure. But from heaven it has been distinctly revealed to the prophet that such an offence is unpardonable, and must be punished by death.

vv. 12, 13 are the key to vv. 1, 2. It is the merriment of despair of which the prophet is the spectator. The enemy is before the walls, but there is no thought of turning to Jehovah, who may still deliver. Hence the prophet threatens the city with capture, and the impenitent among its people with death.

It has always been difficult to explain the severe tone of this prophecy, into which not a gleam of hope penetrates. If it belongs, as has been generally supposed, to the invasion of Sennacherib, it is no easy matter to account for it, as the tone of Isaiah at that great crisis was one of consolation and promise. The most recent critic confesses, 'I am aware of no solution for this fundamental contradiction.'<sup>2</sup> But now that we know of an earlier invasion—that of Sargon—we are relieved from this difficulty. The circumstances of the prophet were very probably different in the two invasions. In the latter one there was probably a union of feeling and purpose between the king and the prophet; the preaching, too, of the latter had probably produced some effect on the better minds. It seems to have been otherwise in the time of Sargon; and finding the prophecy of Ariel ineffectual as a means of moral quickening, Isaiah may have deliberately chosen (for the 'spirit of prophecy' does not exclude deliberation) this harder and sharper tone under the double pressure of calamity and opposition. The view here taken is not inconsistent with the reference to Elam in v. 6. It is true that Elam was not thoroughly conquered by Sargon, but neither was it subjugated by Sennacherib. The Elamites were continually stirring up trouble in the Assyrian empire in the days of both these kings (comp. on xxi. 1-10). But the Annals of Sargon appear to show that a district or province of Elam was annexed by Sargon as early as 721 (R. P., vii. 29), and this is perhaps referred to here under the name of Elam. The combination with Kir shows that Isaiah must intend an integral portion of the Assyrian empire (see on v. 6).

Prof. Friedr. Delitzsch, in his work on the site of Paradise (p. 237 of the German edition), offers the incidental remark, 'that Elam never served in an Assyrian host, any more than the nomad peoples Shoa and Koa; throughout the cuneiform literature it appears only as an ally of the Babylonians.' If this is true, not only of Elam as a whole, but of all Elamitish territories, and if Isaiah was bound to know that an Elamitish contingent in an Assyrian army was inconceivable, we are driven to the conclusion that chap. xxii. was manipulated by some subsequent writer, who was but ill acquainted with the facts of the earlier history. The theory can neither be proved nor disproved. At present the Isaianic authorship of the prophecy as a whole (admitting, however, the possibility of lacunæ) seems to me tenable; the Elamites and Shoites may have been regarded by Isaiah as compulsory allies of their formidable Assyrian neighbours. But even if the description of the army were cast out, the bulk of the prophecy must be Isaiah's, and will still be comprehensible, and this is the main point. (And if this be Isaiah's, why not also xxi. 1-10, which has several features in common with chap. xxii. ?)

<sup>1</sup> All belonging to thee] The whole population of Jerusalem is criminated in this chapter (see Introd.).—Gone up to the house-tops] The meaning of this and the first part of the next verse seems to me clear from v. 13. It was the forced gaiety of despair which drove the people to the banquet-table, and (we may conclude) to the (flat) house-tops also. The latter appear elsewhere as places of concourse at festivals (Judg. xvi. 27, Neh. viii. 16).—Not slain with the sword] There had as yet, therefore, been no actual fighting, but the crowding of refugees from the country-districts had produced famine (comp. Lam. iv. 9) or pestilence (comp. v. 25, Weir), or both.

(comp. 2 Kings xxv. 4, Jer. iv. 29), but, meeting the Assyrians, have thrown their bows away and surrendered. Comp. the terror of the 'house of David' on a less great occasion (vii. 2).—They fled] i.e., while they were fleeing.

<sup>4</sup> The last stage of calamity can be already foreseen; the prophet describes it as 'the destruction' of his people (same word in xiii. 6, Kay).

<sup>5</sup> A day] viz., of judgment (ii. 12). This 'day' is then described in a series of inimitable assonances. We seem to see and hear the last hurrying stages of the siege and capture.

—The valley (or ravine) of vision] Probably one of the valleys about Jerusalem, where, as v. 7 states, the horsemen had taken up a position towards the gate. The meaning of the phrase must remain uncertain. On the analogy of Joel hath the Lord Jehovah Sabáoth, in the valley of vision;

<sup>b</sup> So Luzzatto, Ew. (second ed.)—There is undermining of the wall, and a crying soundeth unto the mountains.—Ew. (first ed.), Del., and most.

v. (iii.) 14<sup>1</sup> it may be conjectured that 'valley of vision' should have some reference to the struggle going on at the place so described. ['Multitudes, multitudes in the valley ('emek) of decision (= Jehoshaphat); for the day of Jehovah is near in the valley of decision.'] 'Vision' may mean 'a vision of Jehovah directing the struggle'; comp. the derivation of Moriah in 2 Chron. iii. 1 ('appearance of Jehovah'). This seems at any rate more natural than Ewald's and Knobel's theory that the phrase designates the quarter where Isaiah lived and received his visions. Others (Ges., Del., comp. Vittr.) have supposed it to be a synonym for Jerusalem, the home of prophecy (comp. Luke xiii. 33). Why, it is asked, should the 'day of discomfiture' be confined to one alone of the valleys of Jerusalem? The only reply is, that it is not really so confined; but the prophet is specially attracted by a spot where the fight was thickest (see above); and on the other hand, we may ask, What propriety is there in calling Jerusalem a 'valley'? It is surely the all but universal practice of the Hebrew writers to describe Jerusalem as a mountain ('mount Zion'), and we may add, to picture the prophets as standing on watch-towers, and not in the valleys. True, the personified people of Jerusalem is addressed in Jer. xxi. 13 as 'inhabitrress of the valley' ('emek), but this is immediately supplemented by the words '(even) of the rock of the level country.'—Kir undermineth . . . ] There were iron tools specially designed for the work of undermining (comp. Josephus, de Bell. Jud., v. 4. 2). Kir and Shoa are the names of parts of the Assyrian empire (on Kir, see below). The latter is mentioned in Ezek. xxiii. 23 in company with Pekod (Puqudu, an Aramæan tribe bordering on Elam in the Assyrian inscriptions) and Koa. It has been identified by Prof. Friedr. Delitsch<sup>2</sup> with the Sutû or Su, a tribe dwelling between the Tigris and the southern slopes of the mountains of Elam (similarly Koa = the Qutû or Qu). The objection I formerly took to the above rendering was that the harmony of the picture was destroyed by so abrupt a commencement of the catalogue of names of peoples. This, however, is not so serious a one as it might be, if the context were certainly preserved in its integrity. But, as I remarked before, this is not the case; how then can we be sure that the two halves of v. 5 originally stood together? (See further in crit. note). 'The mountains' in alt. rend., on the analogy of 'mount Ephraim' for the hill-country of Ephraim, taking har collectively.

<sup>6</sup> It would be a plausible conjecture that a passage has been omitted before v. 6, in which other contingents of the Assyrian army were mentioned; see, however, xxi. 2, (if Isaiah's).—Elam] See Introd. and note on xi. 11.—Kir] The region to which Tiglath-Pileser transported the Damascenes (2 Kings xvi. 9), and from which, according to Am. ix. 7, the Arameans came. This has been generally identified with the district by the river Cyrus (the modern Georgia). But, besides the linguistic objection pointed out by Del. (Kir cannot = Kur), it appears that the Assyrian empire never extended to the Cyrus. We must therefore seek for Kir among the Assyrian conquests mentioned in the Inscriptions; it

The suggestion is Mr. Heilprin's, Historical Poetry of the Hebrews, ii. 180.—Made bare the shield] i.e., took away its leathern covering, comp. Cæs., de Bell. Gall., ii. 21 (Hitz.) See on xxxvii. 33.

<sup>7</sup> Thy choice valleys] Jerusalem was almost surrounded by valleys, e.g., Kidron, Gihon, Rephaim, Hinnom. Comp. Josephus, de Bell. Jud., v. 4. 1.—Had set themselves in line] i.e., ready to enter as soon as 'the gate' was broken through by the rams, comp. Ezek. xxi. 22 (27). It is the 'great gate' referred to by Sennacherib (Taylor's cylinder), who boasts of having 'caused them to break through' it. The remains are still to be seen, says Lieut. Conder.

<sup>8</sup> Then did he draw aside . . .] The subject is Jehovah (comp. v. 5). 'Drawing aside the curtain' means either exposing the utter weakness of the state to the enemy (Ew., Meier), or, opening the eyes of the Judeans to their danger (comp. xxix. 10, 18 Hitz., Knob., Del.). The former view seems the more suitable.—Here begins the account of the measures of defence taken by the citizens. Very similar is the Chronicler's account of Hezekiah's preparations for the siege of Sennacherib, 2 Chr. xxxii. 2-5, 30 (see Q. P. B.), and as the memory of Sargon's siege had faded away by the time of the Chronicler, it is possible that there is a confusion between the precautions taken on these two occasions. The compiler of Kings alludes briefly to some of the same measures as the Chronicler, but does not assign a date (2 Kings xx. 20). It was of course a matter of primary importance to prevent the enemy from using the water of the fountains (see on vii. 3). Sargon gives a similar account of the preparations for the siege of Ashdod (Smith, Assyrian Discoveries, p. 291 top), 'And they brought the waters of the springs in front of the city.' The first step of the citizens, however, is to look after the supply of arms.—The forest-house]—'the house of the forest of Lebanon' (1 Kings vii. 2, x. 17, Jer. xxii. 23), a part of Solomon's palace, which was used as an arsenal (xxxix. 2.)

<sup>9</sup> And ye saw . . .] 'Ye,' i.e., the princes, who practically monopolised the government (comp. on vii. 2, xxxii. 1).—The city of David] i.e. the fortress Zion, 2 Sam. v. 7, 9.—The lower pool] Certainly not the mediæval tank called Birket-es-Sultân, but possibly the pool made by Hezekiah, according to 2 Kings xx. 20.

<sup>10</sup> The houses . . . ye counted] Partly to see how many could be spared, partly for the inhabitants to identify their property.—To fortify the wall] To withstand the shocks of the battering-rams. So 2 Chr. xxxii. 5, 'and he built up all the wall that was broken, and raised thereupon towers,' and Jer. xxxiii. 4 'the houses . . . which are down the houses to fortify the wall, <sup>11</sup> and ye made a lake between the two walls for the water of the old pool ; but ye looked not unto him who made it, and him who formed it from afar ye did not regard. <sup>12</sup> And the Lord, Jehovah Sabáoth, called in that day to weeping, and to lamentation, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth ; <sup>13</sup> but behold, joy and gladness, killing oxen and slaughtering sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine, ' Eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die.' <sup>14</sup> But (this) hath been made known <sup>e</sup> in the ears thrown down because of (i.e., to resist) the mounds and because of the engines of war.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>11</sup> A lake] i.e., a large pool, or reservoir.—Between the two walls] i.e., between that of Ophel on the east, and that of the High Tower on the west, where the Tyropæon valley is particularly narrow.

—The old pool] i.e. probably the ' Pool of Siloam ' (called ' The Pool ' par excellence in the Hebrew inscription in the rock-tunnel leading to Siloam).—But ye looked not] A contrast to ' thou didst look ' (v. 8).—Who made it . . . formed it] i.e., in the counsels of eternity, as appears from xxxvii. 26 (same words). Comp. on v. 12.

<sup>12</sup> And the Lord . . . called] i.e., the prophet, God's messenger, or perhaps the silent march of events, called upon you to repent ; penitence might have turned the Divine purpose, Joel ii. 14.—To baldness] So Am. viii. 10, ' I will bring . . . baldness upon every head.' The prophets accept things as they are, and do not trouble themselves with premature innovations. ' Baldness,' however, is forbidden in Lev. xxi. 5, Deut. xiv. 1.

<sup>13</sup> But no moral effect has been produced by calamity. They rush to the banquet-table with despair in their hearts, and waste the provisions which ought to be husbanded for the siege.—For to-morrow we shall die] It is doubted whether these words are quoted in mockery from the prophet (Ges.), or whether they express the sensualism of despair (Hitz.). The latter view is simpler and more natural.

<sup>14</sup> But it is made known . . .] The Rabbis understand ' this thing ' for a subject, and ' saith ' before ' Jehovah Sabáoth ' (comp. v. 9), or else explain as if they read ' I am Jehovah Sabáoth.' The ordinary explanation is still more forced. A single vowel-point is wrong ; the Massoretes shrank from the anthropomorphism ' the ears of Jehovah.'

—Shall not be cancelled . . .] Death shall indeed overtake you by the hand of the enemy (as A.E. rightly explains), as the punishment of your guilt. ' Some of the Jewish writers understand the words to mean "at death, but not before," and draw the inference that death does or may atone for sin ' (Alexander). But it is not a Biblical idea that a sinner who has borne his punishment is thereby released from guilt. Punishment has only the effect of expiation when borne by the innocent on behalf of the guilty. See Riehm, Der Begriff der Sühne u.s.w., Theol. Studien u. Kritiken,

of Jehovah<sup>c</sup> Sabáoth; surely this iniquity shall not be cancelled unto you till ye die, saith the Lord, Jehovah Sabáoth.

vv. 15-25. Denunciation of Shebna and promises to Eliakim. Probably this prophecy was written a short time before the invasion of Sennacherib, for in the narrative of this event Shebna is represented as holding a lower office (see on vv. 20-24). Isaiah's only invective against an individual.

the Pharaohs and Caliphs of Egypt, &c.), builds himself a sepulchre in his lifetime. Comp. xiv. 18, 'thy grave.'—What (right) hast thou here?] Shebna's offence is aggravated by his being a foreigner. Even at a much later time a 'potter's field' was good enough 'to bury strangers in' (Matt. xxvii. 7). 'Here,' i.e., in Jerusalem; note the indignant repetition.—On high] Not necessarily on mount Zion (Knob.), or on its eastern slope (Del.). Tombs have been found on the slopes of all the hills about Jerusalem.—A habitation] Heb. mishkan, elsewhere used only of God, and implying a great personage and a long sojourn (comp. Eccles. xii. 5, Ps. xlix. 12, Sept., Targ.).—O man] I formerly rendered 'O mighty man!' supposing a touch of irony in the phrase. This is certainly suggested by the etymology, but is not favoured by the use of the word elsewhere, especially in Job, where it several times occurs (but without irony), in strong contrast with God (see Job iv. 17, x. 5, xxii. 2).—A broad country] i.e., the plains of Mesopotamia.

thither shall go thy glorious chariots, thou disgrace of the house of thy lord! <sup>19</sup> And I will thrust thee from thy post, and from thy station shall he pull thee down. <sup>20</sup> And it shall come to pass in that day that I will call my servant Eliakim, son of Hilkiyah, <sup>21</sup> and I will clothe him with thy robe, and with thy girdle will I bind him, and thy authority will I give into his hand, and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and to the house of Judah; <sup>22</sup> and I will lay the key of the house of David upon his back, so that he shall open and none shall shut, and he shall shut and none shall open <sup>23</sup> And I will strike him as a peg into a sure place, and he shall be for a seat of honour to his father's house; <sup>24</sup> and they shall hang upon him all the honour of his father's house, the scions and the offshoots, all the vessels of small size, from the

<sup>20-24</sup> Nomination of Eliakim. We have only evidence of a partial fulfilment of Isaiah's authoritative word. Eliakim was house-steward, and Shebna merely secretary, when the Rab-shakeh came to Jerusalem (xxxvi. 3). Perhaps this was all that Hezekiah was able to effect against the opposition of the 'princes.' Isaiah evidently predicts a complete change of system, which would consist in the total abstinence from a policy of expediency and worldly alliances. Hence the strong language, almost Messianic in its tone, with which Isaiah hails in spirit the elevation of his disciple Eliakim.

The 'key' here symbolizes the authority of the 'Deputy' or royal representative. (See on ix. 6, and comp. Matt. xvi. 19, Rev. iii. 7.) An Eastern key is as much as a man can carry (see figures in Bonomi's Nineveh and its Palaces, p. 150).

<sup>23-24</sup> Description of Eliakim's tenure of office.—As a peg into a sure place] i.e., into a good solid wall—not mere plaster, as in an ordinary house—so as to be able to support a large number of vessels. (Comp. Zech. x. 4, where 'peg' = prince.)

<sup>24</sup> All the honour of his father's house] This is a strange expression, as it has to cover the undistinguished members of Eliakim's family as well as the distinguished. 'Honour' must be almost equivalent to 'multitude' (so Hitz., Del.), and no doubt the importance of a family ('father's house' = family) depended chiefly on its numbers. The entire passage, too, is strange, seeming, as it does, to give the Divine sanction to family-partiality. I say 'seeming,' because I suspect that the fall with which Eliakim in his turn is threatened is the punishment of an evil tendency which Isaiah noticed in Eliakim.—Offshoots] A contemptuous expression (cognate word Ezek. iv. 15).

bowl-shaped vessels to all pitcher-like vessels. <sup>25</sup> In that day—an oracle of Jehovah Sabáoth—the peg that is struck into a sure place shall give way; it shall be cut down and shall fall and the burden upon it shall perish, for Jehovah hath spoken.

<sup>25</sup> The peg] It is doubted whether this refers to Shebna or Eliakim; but surely 'the peg' must be identical with that mentioned in the preceding verses. There is nothing strange in the anticipation that a high Eastern official should not be in favour for ever, and that his fall should involve the ruin of his adherents. The difficulty lies in the words 'in that day,' which seem to co-ordinate, by way of contrast, the event here spoken of with that in v. 19. But we need not interpret the phrase so strictly. It may, in v. 25, merely imply that at the very time when Eliakim's connections are basking in the sunshine of prosperity, a sudden change shall come. Thus Jehovah will 'profane the pride of all glory' (xxiii. 9).

CHAPTER XXIII.

AN elegy, in three stanzas or strophes (vv. 1-5, 6-9, 10-14), on the fall of Tyre, followed by a kind of appendix on the future revival of the merchant-city. For an analysis, see J. C. A., p. 55.

There have been great differences of opinion as to the date of this prophecy, several eminent critics supposing that the siege referred to is that of Nebuchadnezzar (comp. Ezek. xxvi. 4-21). The main argument in favour of this view is derived from v. 13. Taking this verse together with the next, it was not unnatural to suppose that the Chaldeans were thus prominently mentioned as the future destroyers of Tyre. But there is another view of the verse, and one, moreover, which is exegetically easier, viz. that the fate of the Chaldeans is pointed to as a warning for Tyre:—Babylonia had fallen a prey to Assyria, how should Tyre escape? This view, natural as it is, could not, however, have been entertained until it was possible to show that Babylonia had really been thus severely chastised by her powerful neighbour. Now that this has been done—now that we know that Babylonia was conquered three times over in the reigns of Sargon and Sennacherib (see Introd. to xxi. 1-10), there seems nothing to prevent us from adopting it.<sup>1</sup> The selfishness and injustice on which the Tyrian empire was based were to the prophet a sure guarantee of its overthrow, and a special revelation appears to have warned him to expect the event about this time.

But which of the three Assyrian invasions of Babylonia is intended in v. 13? There can hardly be a doubt; the description well applies to the third, and to this alone. 'His (Merodach-Baladan's) cities I laid waste,' says Sennacherib, 'and burned with fire.' True, there is no capture of Tyre mentioned as following upon this devastation; it was in the preceding year's expedition that Luli (the Elulæus of Menander, Jos., Antiq., ix. 14, 2) king of Zidon, and suzerain (as appears from Menander) of Phœnicia, fled at the approach of Sennacherib to the island of Cyprus (R. P., vii. 61). But it is no part of an interpreter's duty to prove the complete, literal fulfilment of a prophecy;<sup>1</sup> all that he has to do, in order to promote the enjoyment of the reader, is to collect and illustrate the data of the prophecy. It is certain that, from a moral point of view Phœnicia deserved chastisement, certain that the fate of Babylonia was an evil omen to other vassal states.

The minor key in which the prophecy is pitched reminds us of xxi. 1-10. Tyre, Babylon, and Judah were fellow-sufferers from Assyria. 'The poetical art of the piece is in a very high degree finished,' remarks Ewald, who, however, finds the 'elevation, magnificence, and energetic brevity' of Isaiah wholly wanting, and suspects (as in the case of chap. xxxiii.) that a younger contemporary and disciple of the prophet is the author. This is possible, as many phenomena converge to show that Isaiah's works were not always edited by himself; but I am particularly loth to deny so artistic a work to this great and, as Ewald admits, many-sided prophet.

<sup>3</sup> On great waters] i.e., on the ocean-highway (comp. Ps. cvii. 23, Ezek. xxvii. 26).—Shihor] i.e., the Nile, as Jer. ii. 18. Perhaps 'the dark grey' (see on xiv. 12), from the colour of the water; if so, a Semitic name for the Nile, but Friedr. Del. questions this (Paradies, p. 311).—On the connection of Phœnicia and Egypt, see Ezek. xxvii. 7, Movers, Die Phönizier, ii. 3, pp. 314-336, Ebers, Ägypten und die Bücher Moses, i. 147, &c. The Egyptians had no timber to build seaworthy ships; hence their foreign trade was carried on for them by the Phœnicians.—The gain] Not 'mart,' for the Phœnicians themselves distributed their wares, and these in their turn became a source of gain to other nations (Del. after Luzzatto).

ashamed, O Zidon, for the sea, the stronghold of the sea, speaketh, saying, I have not been in travail, nor brought forth, nor reared young men, nor brought up virgins. <sup>5</sup> When the tidings come to Egypt they shall be sore pained at the tidings of Tyre.—<sup>6</sup> Pass ye over to Tarshish; howl, ye inhabitants of the coast! <sup>7</sup> <sup>b</sup> Is this, to your sorrow, the joyous one,<sup>b</sup> whose origin is of ancient days, whose feet <sup>c</sup> were wont to carry <sup>c</sup> her afar off to sojourn? <sup>8</sup> Who hath devised this against Tyre, the giver of crowns, whose merchants were princes, whose traders were the honourable of the earth? <sup>9</sup> Jehovah Sabaoth hath devised it, to desecrate the pride of all glory, to disgrace all the honourable of the earth.—<sup>10</sup> Overflow thy land as the

14. In the following words, Tyre is aptly described as daughter of the sea, but (a figure to express the completeness of the ruin) denied by her own mother.

<sup>5</sup> They shall be sore pained] Tyre being, as it were, an outpost of Egypt against the Assyrians.

—Joyous] as Zeph. ii. 15.—Of ancient days] see Herod. ii. 44, Josephus, Ant. viii. 3, 1.—Whose feet were wont . . .] Alluding to the distant commercial journeys of the Tyrians. Alt. rend. may be explained in two ways,—of captivity (Ges.), or of flight (Ew.). Either way is plausible. The first is supported by the striking verbal parallel in 2 Kings xxi. 8 (overlooked by Ges.); the second gives a special force to the words 'to sojourn,' which will mean that the Phœnician fugitives are to be only tolerated μέτοικοι (= gerim) in their own colonies. But I think the context decides that the clause must contain, a feature, not of the present Tyre, but of the past. In this case, too, 'to sojourn' is a perfectly accurate phrase.

<sup>8</sup> The giver of crowns], viz., to the kings of the Phœnician colonies, perhaps also of the other Phœnician cities. Modern parallels will occur to everyone.

<sup>9</sup> To desecrate] So Ezek. xxviii. 7. Beauty having a kind of natural sanctity (comp. Lev. xix. 29, Heb.). There is no occasion to imagine a special reference to the temples of Tyre (as Del.).

<sup>10</sup> The fall of Tyre is the signal for the emancipation of her colonies. About this time we hear of a revolt of Cyprus, and the Phœnician cities assisting Shalmaneser (or Sargon) in the siege of Tyre—Josephus, Ant. ix. 14, 2. Tarshish, or Tartessus, with its silver mines, may well have been, as Strachey remarks, the hardest treated of all the colonies.—As the Nile] 'The river that least regards any bounds.'—There is no girdle] The expression is strange. It looks at first as if it referred to Tarshish (comp. iii. 24), but this does not suit the con-

Nile ; O daughter of Tarshish, there is no girdle any more.

<sup>11</sup> Kingdoms] i.e., especially those of Phœnicia and Syria,—hence ‘over the sea.’—Gave charge] So of Jehovah’s instruments, xiii. 2.—Canaan] i.e., Phœnicia, comp. Josh. v. 1, Sept. The word means ‘depression,’ and was therefore applied to various lowland-districts of Syria.

<sup>12</sup> The fate of Tyre shall be shared by all Phœnicia, here called the daughter of Zidon—hence the plural ‘strongholds’ in v. 11.—Pass over to Chittim] Luli, king of Zidon, had already sought refuge in Cyprus ; see Introd.—Thou shalt have no rest] For the long arm of Assyria will reach them even there. The importance of Cyprus as a naval station was recognised by the Babylonians fifteen or sixteen centuries B.C. The inscription of Sargon, king of Agadé, relates how ‘the sea of the setting sun he crossed,’ and in the third year conquered a land which can hardly be any other than Cyprus, as Mr. Boscawen has pointed out. The inscription is translated in part by Mr. G. Smith, T. S. B. A., ii. 49–51. Cyprus was also, as we have seen, conquered by the Assyrian Sargon.

In the first half of the verse he speaks of the land of Chaldea ; in the second, of its capital—Babylon, the fall of which involves that of the land. The subject in the latter part is throughout Assyria. For the change of number, comp. v. 23, 26.—Chaldea] On the form Kasdim, see crit. note. ‘In the cuneiform documents Kaldi is a tribe of the great nation of Accad, which became entirely predominant in the southern provinces [on the lower Euphrates] from the ninth century B.C., but certainly existed previously’ (Lenormant). ‘Under Merodach-Baladan [they] made themselves so important and integral a part of its (Babylonia’s) population as to give their name to the whole country’ (Sayce). There is, therefore, no historical reason why Isaiah should not have used the term ‘land of Kasdim’ for Babylonia, the conquest of which by Sargon might not unnaturally be referred to in this connection (see Introd.). For other, now antiquated, views, see Notes and Criticisms, pp. 22–26.—For desert-beasts] Comp. xiii. 21, xxxiv. 14, Jer. l. 39, Ps. lxxiv. 14, and, on the Heb. word, see Notes and Criticisms.—Their towers] i.e., their siege-works.—Laid low] Lit., laid bare (the foundations of).

Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, as the days of one king; at the end of seventy years it shall be unto Tyre as in the song of the harlot: <sup>16</sup> 'Take the lute, go round the city, forgotten harlot! Play skilfully, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.' <sup>17</sup> And it shall come to pass that at the end of seventy years the Lord shall visit Tyre, and she shall return to her hire, and play the harlot with all kingdoms of the earth on the face of the ground. <sup>18</sup> And her earnings and her hire shall be holy unto Jehovah; it shall not be stored up nor hoarded, but to those who dwell before Jehovah shall her earnings belong for sufficiency of eating and for splendid clothing.

the appendix on the conversion of Egypt, chapter xix.—Seventy years] Most expositors regard these seventy years as those of the Babylonian captivity, according to Jer. xxv. 11, 12. But it is strange that Isaiah should specify the duration of the captivity in connection with Tyre, and not with Judah. Is it not rather bold to suppose a lost prophecy on the subject of the length of the captivity, which is what these expositors ought in consistency to do, unless they are prepared to bring down the appendix to the age of Jeremiah? It is surely allowable to understand these seventy years as a conventional expression for a long period, just as 'forty years' is used elsewhere: Ezek. xxix. 13 (see Speaker's Comm.). Seven is a sacred number, and 'the decade denotes the fulfilment of times, after which a new æon begins.'—As the days of one king] Meaning not that there should really be only one king during these seventy years, but that the condition of Tyre should remain as unchanged as if there were, an Oriental king being too proud to reverse a decree (Esth. viii. 8).—The song of the harlot] Evidently some well-known song, a fragment of which follows. The tone is evidently sarcastic; the singer by no means anticipates that the harlot will be 'remembered!' The prophet, however, applies the song as if it were meant in earnest. Commerce, as having regard to purely worldly interests, is called 'harlotry,' comp. 'the iniquity of his covetousness,' lvii. 17. A further parallel between Tyre and the harlot or bayadde (ballatrix) of this song lies in the conditionality of the renewal of prosperity. Commerce shall revive, but only as the handmaid of religion.

<sup>18</sup> Tyrian tribute promised for the 'city of the great king' (Ps. xlviii. 2): tribute—not merely commercial intercourse, such as the Jews no doubt had with the Tyrians, as Dean Plumptre reminds us, after the captivity (Ezra iii. 7, Neh. xiii. 16). A strange announcement, says Del.; hæc secundum historiam necdum facta comperimus, remarks St. Jerome. Holy unto Jehovah] Inconsistent apparently with Deut. xxiii. 18, but the Biblical writers only adhere to their metaphors so far as suits their purpose.—Not be stored up] Comp. Zech. ix. 3, Joel iii. 5.—Those who dwell before Jehovah] i.e., the people of Jerusalem. It is not said 'those who stand before Jehovah;' that would mean the priests.—For sufficiency of eating] Implying that the prophet wrote at a time of great scarcity, or when a scarcity might be apprehended. This may of course be harmonized with a post-exile date (comp. Hag. i., Zech. viii. 12), but also with the times of Isaiah (i. 7, iii. 1, 7).

CHAPTERS XXIV.-XXVII.

AN imaginative picture of the overthrow of the mighty power which, at the real or assumed period of the prophecy, held the Jews in bondage, interwoven with descriptions of the unhappy state of God's people prior to their deliverance, and of the glorious lot reserved for them. This is introduced by an equally imaginative picture of the Divine judgment upon the whole world, and references to the world-wide extent of the judgment recur at intervals. This is not the first time we have met with an apparent identification of a temporary judgment upon the Jews with the great final judgment upon the world :—see on ii. 12, iii. 13, xiii. 9. It is, however, simply a combination and not a confusion. The Jews have had special privileges ; they are the 'house of God,' and judgment naturally 'begins' with them (comp. 1 Pet. iv. 17), and with the nations with whom their fortunes have been linked.—The historical situation, it must be candidly admitted, is described in highly enigmatical language (see below), and it is not unnatural that some critics (both in Calvin's day and in our own) have denied its existence altogether. Among these Del. and Naeg. may be specially mentioned, who regard this group of chapters as throughout a symbolically expressed prediction of a still future judgment upon the world, and to whom the 'city of chaos' is neither Babylon, nor Susa, nor Jerusalem, but the centre (localise it where you please) of the antitheistic world. Quod mihi nimis coactum videtur (Calvin) ; the theory compels us to empty the most striking expressions of their meaning, and is also contrary to the analogy of other prophecies. On the other hand, the view adopted above is both natural in itself, and is supported by the position of these chapters in the Book of Isaiah. The latter point was clearly seen by Calvin. 'As far as I can judge,' says he, 'this prophecy is the close of all the preceding ones, from chap. xiii. onwards . . . Having as it were traversed all the regions near to and known by the Jews, Isaiah briefly sums up their contents.' Even those who regard the prophecy as anonymous may recognise the propriety of the place which it has received in the book. They will not of course agree with Naegelsbach that the prophet is here describing the final stage in a great judgment of God upon the Gentile nations, of which the denunciations in chaps. xiii.-xxiii. represent the preliminaries. Looking at the prophecy as a whole in itself, not written for its present position, however admirably it may fill it, they will rather regard the judgment here denounced upon Israel's enemies as the second stage in the great trial, the Babylonian captivity being the first ('thy chastening,' xxvi. 16).

As for the vagueness or mysteriousness of the language, this ought to be no difficulty to those who recognise in any degree the eschatological purport of the prophecy. The more the authors of the prophetic or apocalyptic literature have their minds directed to the 'latter days,' the more mysterious becomes their language, the greater their tendency to use and general expressions.

<sup>1</sup> Behold . . . ] 'Behold' with a participle, in the prophets, almost always points to the future (iii. 1, vii. 14, xvii. 1, &c.). This favours the view of Ew., Del., Naeg., that the whole of chap. xxiv. is predictive. Others (Hitz., Knob., Kuenen, &c.) take it as a description of events which are actually taking place; this may seem to be confirmed by the perfects. But surely it suits the imaginative character of the work better to regard these as prophetic—as proceeding from the point of view of one who had attained a specially clear insight into the eternal purposes of God.

<sup>2</sup> So with the priest] It is inferred by some that at the real or assumed standing-point of this prophecy the priests were the paramount power in Judah. It may be so—there is the same prominence given to the priests in Joel. But perhaps the prophet selects those simplest of relations which extend to the lowest ranks of society. Every one comes into contact with a priest, but not every one with a king.

<sup>5</sup> The earth is become profane . . . ] 'For blood profaneth the land,' Num. xxxv. 33, comp. Ps. cvi. 38. The blood-shedding by which the great empires of the East were founded (comp. xxvi. 21) was a violation of that elementary statute on which the perpetual covenant with Noah and his sons was based. The latter phrase seems to be a direct allusion to Gen. ix. 16:—it can hardly refer to the special covenant of circumcision (Gen. xvii. 13), or of the Sabbath (Ex. xxxi. 16), for it is a judgment upon the earth exclusive of Israel (see xxvi. 20, 21), which the prophet is describing. The phrases 'precepts,' and 'statute,' mean more than 'the law written in the heart' (A.E., Del.), and are best explained by the same passage in Genesis. Obs., 'commandments' in the plural occurs only here in Isaiah.

<sup>6</sup> Jehovah has recalled his promise not to bring a second deluge upon the earth (see on v. 18).—A curse] Personified, as in Zech. v. 3, Dan. ix. 11, Jer. xxiii. 10 (where there is almost the same paronomasia). Comp. on ix. 8. —Are scorched] By the 'burning anger' (xxx. 27) of Jehovah.

<sup>7 8</sup> Gesenius finds here an imitation of Joel i. 10-12; Vittr. compares a striking passage in the prayer of Judah the Maccabee, 1 Macc. iii. 45, which he regards as describing the fulfilment of this prediction. Music at feasts, as v. 12.

<sup>9</sup> Strong drink . . . ] i.e. artificial wine (see on v. 12). Understand, 'If there be any;' otherwise the description will be inconsistent.

<sup>10</sup> The city of chaos ] i.e., the city which is destined to become a very chaos (tôhû), its outer and inner order being destroyed, and no germ of life remaining. It is an allusion to the narrative (oral or written) of the Creation; comp. 'And the earth was waste and wild' (tôhû-va-bôhû), Gen. i. 2. It is the most striking expression for utter desolation which the prophet could have chosen, and is specially characteristic of the Book of Isaiah, for 11 out of the 20 passages in which it occurs in the Old Testament are in Isaiah. I ought to add that of these 11 passages, 10 occur in prophecies of disputed authorship.—Shut up ] Inaccessible, owing to its ruinous condition.

mouth,' Joel i. 5. Comp. also xv. 8-10. Hitz. remarks that v. 11 is an unda redundans of vv. 8, 9; and v. 12 of v. 10.

<sup>13</sup> 'For,' in fact, the condition of the world (or, possibly, of the region once ruled over by Israel's oppressors) will then be like that of an olive-tree after the regular beating (xvii. 6), or of the vine-plants when the vintage is over. There will be indeed a remnant out of all that multitude of 'peoples,' but how small will be that remnant! Of whom will it consist? Of the Jewish nation, no doubt; but also of some of the Gentiles; for a kindred prophet writes, 'Whosoever shall invoke the name of Jehovah shall be delivered' (Joel ii. 32). It must be a part of this remnant, whose chorus of praise to the God of Israel echoes from the (Mediterranean) sea (v. 14). But the survivors are not all gathered in one place. Hence they call upon other escaped ones in the (distant) countries of the sea (v. 15), to acknowledge and to praise the hand of Jehovah. The description is obscure, but there is a general parallel in xlii. 10-12, where the various regions of the earth—the (far) 'countries' are also mentioned—are called upon to praise Jehovah for his great work of deliverance. Obs. in passing the instance which v. 15 supplies peoples, as at the beating of the olive, as at the grape-gleaning when the vintage is done. <sup>14</sup> Those shall lift up their voice, they shall ring out a cry;—because of Jehovah's majesty they shall shout aloud from the sea :—<sup>15</sup> 'Therefore in the <sup>d</sup> countries glorify ye Jehovah ; in the countries of the sea the name of Jehovah, Israel's God !' <sup>16</sup> From the skirt of the earth we have heard songs, 'Honour (is come) for the righteous!' But I said, Wasting away is for me, wasting away is for me, alas for me! The barbarous deal barbarously, and the barbarous deal very barbarously. <sup>17</sup> A terror and a pit and a snare are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth ! <sup>18</sup> And it shall come to pass that whoso fleeth from the report of the terror shall

of that ascending rhythm, characteristic of this prophecy—'in the countries . . . in the countries of the sea;' comp. xxv. 5, xxvi. 3-7, 11, 15 (Judg. v., Ps. xxix., cxxi., cxxiv.). For how a Hebrew prophet can have written 'the lights' (or rather 'the flames') for 'the East,' is to me simply unintelligible, and the comparison of lix. 19, Iliad, xii. 239, does not lessen the difficulty. A. E. has already the right rend. 'in the regions,' though he has to force it out of the received text by comparing 'Ur of the Chaldees' (as if 'country of the Chaldees,' as Sept. of Gen. xi. 28). For the rend. 'countries,' or 'far lands,' see on xl. 15.

<sup>16</sup> A new song is heard 'from the skirt of the earth,' viz. Honour for the righteous! i.e., splendid is the lot of the righteous' (see Sept.), the righteous being primarily the Jews (as in xxvi. 2)—not Jehovah, who is nowhere in O. T. simply called 'the righteous,' nor said to have honour or splendour, 'glory' being the word for Jehovah, 'honour' for the fairest of created things (see Del.)—much less 'the conqueror' (as Hilgenfeld, comparing Zech. ix. 9, but wrongly).—We have heard . . . But I said [In recording the bright side of his vision, the prophet had lost sight of himself, and become identified in feeling with the regenerate, 'righteous' community ; but the interval of misery to be passed through before such blessedness can be reached wrings from him a cry as of personal pain, twice-repeated.—Wasting away (is) for me!] It would seem that he laments the sufferings actually undergone by the Jews in his own time, just as the Psalmist exclaims, in the name of the pious Israelites, 'My flesh hath pined away, so that it hath no fatness' (Ps. cix. 24). Here, then, the prophecy refers, not to the world's judgment-day as a whole, but to that single stage of it represented by a particular period in the history of the Jews (comp. on v. 3).—The barbarous [i.e., primarily the oppressors of the Jews, as xxi. 2 (note), xxxiii. 1.

<sup>17, 18</sup> The same language recurs with little variation in Jer. xlviii. 43, 44 (of Moab). The prophet is now occupied with the thought of the world-wide extent of the catastrophe. No sooner will one calamity be over, than another will come. If Babylon is punished to-day, the countries of the west will suffer to-morrow.—For windows . . . ] Again has 'all flesh corrupted its way,' and again must 'all flesh be cut off' by a judgment not inferior to Noah's flood. Comp. Gen. vii. 11.

fail into the pit ; and whoso cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare ; for windows from the height have opened, and the earth's foundations do shake. <sup>19</sup> The earth is utterly broken ; the earth is utterly shattered ; the earth tottereth exceedingly ; <sup>20</sup> the earth staggereth like a drunkard, and moveth to and fro like a hammock ; and the rebellion thereof is heavy upon it, and it shall fall, and not rise again.

<sup>21</sup> And it shall come to pass in that day that Jehovah shall hold visitation upon the host of the height in the height, and

<sup>19</sup> The language here imitates the cracking and bursting with which the present world shall pass away ; for nothing less is the necessary close of the judgment, so far as the guilty parties are concerned (comp. v. 5).

<sup>20</sup> Like a hammock] Like a vineyard-watchman's deserted hammock, tossed to and fro by the storm, till at last it is swept far away.—It shall fall] We must remember that, according to the Hebrew cosmology (and it was no function of the prophets to correct this), the earth was immovable. Hence the destruction of the earth is described as its 'fall' (comp. xiii. 13). It is implied that there shall be a 'new heaven and a new earth.'

<sup>21-22</sup> 'Jehovah will overthrow the kings of the earth and their celestial patrons, and take the government into his own hands.'—Shall visit upon the host of the height] 'The height' is a synonym for 'heaven' (see v. 18, xl. 26, lvii. 15), and the 'host of heaven' is a constant expression for either the angels (1 Kings xxii. 19) or the stars (Jer. xxxiii. 22). The meaning of the 'visitation' is obscure ; but there is probably a parallel in Ps. lxxxii., where Bleek (and similarly Kusters) rightly understand the Elohim to be the patron-spirits of the nations, who are threatened with deprivation of their superhuman character, and death.<sup>1</sup> We have an early interpretation of the passage before us in Enoch xviii. 13-16 (with which comp. 2 Pet. ii. 4, Jude 6, Rev. xx. 2, 3) : 'And horrible was that which I saw there ; seven stars, like great burning mountains, and like spirits, which besought me. The angel said, This is the place where heaven and earth are at an end ; it serves for a prison for the stars of heaven and for the host of heaven. And the stars which roll upon the fire are those which transgressed the command of God before their rising, since they did not come in their appointed time. And he became wroth with them, and bound them unto the time when their guilt should be complete, in the year of the secret.' The Book of Job, too, contains dark allusions to struggles between Jehovah and the powers of heaven, and the Babylonians had various mythic stories of a war between the sun and the storm-demons (comp. on xxvii. 1). It is a singularly dark allusion which the prophet here makes to certain rebellious denizens of the upper regions, either stars or spirits, or rather both together, the celestial patrons of the nations of the world (comp. on xxxiv. 4). Whether upon the kings of the earth on the earth. <sup>22</sup> And they shall be gathered * as captives are gathered * into the pit, and shut up in the prison, and after many days they shall be visited. <sup>23</sup> And the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, for Jehovah Sabáoth hath become king in mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his elders shall be glory.

these are to be imagined as seducing the earthly kings to evil (Del.), I cannot say ; there is, at any rate, a mysterious relation between the fate of the heavenly and of the earthly powers, as there is between the fate of the angels and of the churches in Rev. i.-iii. 'All things are double, one against the other.'

<sup>22</sup> Pit] i.e., dungeon, as Ex. xii. 29: the prophet probably means Sheól. In Enoch xviii. 14-16 the stars find a prison in space.—They shall be visited] In a good or a bad sense? Authorities are divided. Jerome, Rashi, Vittr., Ges., lean to the sense of punishing ; Pesh., Aben Ezra, Calv., Hitz., Ew., Del., to that of pardoning (as xxiii. 17 ; comp. 15). It is difficult, however, to see why there should be two punishments—unless, 'after the manner of men,' we suppose some treasonable plotting against Jehovah's government ; and it is more in accordance with the analogy of prophecy that the vanquished kings should cast their crowns before the throne of God. We need not trouble ourselves about the meaning of the 'visitation,' as applied to the 'host of heaven.' For these were merely mentioned because of their connection with the 'kings of the earth'—a connection which was only broken by the imprisonment of the latter. The kings when released will be no longer kings, but humble subjects. — This passage early excited the curiosity of Christian readers. It has contributed the release, as xxvii. 1 contributed the final destruction, of the 'dragon,' to the picture in Rev. xx. 1-10, and was considered by the Origenists (see Jerome ad loc.) to favour their opinion of the future salvation of the evil spirits.

<sup>23</sup> Hath become king] So Mic. v. 7. It is the phrase for coming to the throne, 2 Sam. v. 4, 1 Kings xv. 1, &c. Hitherto Israel had been subject to 'other lords' (xxvi. 13), or at best to Jehovah's human representatives.—And before . . .] The 'elders' are the representatives of the people (see on iii. 2). These shall be admitted to a direct intuition of the Divine glory, like the seventy elders of old (Ex. xxiv. 9, 10), and shall carry the reflection of it wherever they go (Ex. xxxiv. 29).

CHAPTER XXV.

THE judgment upon all the enemies of Jehovah having been consummated, the prophet, in the name of believing Israel, offers praise to God. The hymn reminds us of chap. xii.

far off counsels—perfect faithfulness. <sup>2</sup> For thou hast made a citadel into a heap, a fortified city into a ruin, a castle of foreigners to be no city, not to be built again. <sup>3</sup> Therefore fierce peoples glorify thee, cities of terrible nations fear thee; <sup>4</sup> for thou hast been a fortress to the weak, a fortress to the poor in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat; for the blast of the terrible ones was like a storm against a wall. <sup>5</sup> As heat in a parched land, thou subduest the uproar of foreigners; as heat by the shadow of clouds, the song of terrible ones is brought low.

<sup>6</sup> And Jehovah Sabáoth shall make unto all peoples in this mountain a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the

xv. 2, 11, Ps. cxviii. 28, cxlv. 1.—Far off counsels] Purposes eternally conceived (xxii. 11, xxxvii. 26); or, prophecies long since uttered ('counsellor,' xli. 28). The plural marks width of range.

<sup>2</sup> Thou hast made . . .] Not, I think, a mere generalisation from God's providential dealings (comp. Ps. cvii. 33), but either the mystic Babylon, which is yet to be revealed (virtually the view of Del.), or—which seems easier—the chief city of Israel's oppressors. Comp. xxiv. 10.

<sup>3</sup> The remnant of the oppressors of the Jews (comp. v. 4 δ) shall be terrified into submission to Jehovah (comp. Rev. xi. 13); or, perhaps, nations like-minded with those may be referred to, comp. lix. 19.—Fierce peoples] The rend. is justified by the plural verb, and by the plural noun in the parallel line.

<sup>4</sup> Against a wall] Lit., of a wall. I doubt if this phrase can be correct. It is almost too concise to be intelligible, and if correctly explained (as e.g. by Del.), 'beating vainly against a wall,' scarcely suits the context. It is the violence, not the ineffectualness, of the attack which needs emphasising.

case will pass into grateful love.

—A feast of fat things] An image of the highest spiritual and temporal blessings (see on lv. 1), not improbably suggested by the sacrificial meal connected with the Shélem (thank- or peace-offering), as Ps. xxii. 26, 29. According to the Levitical law the fat pieces of the victim were to be devoted to Jehovah immediately by burning, and the next best piece, the breast, mediately by giving it to His servants the priests (Lev. vii. 31); and the Messianic prophecy, Jer. xxxi. 14, is in substantial harmony with this arrangement. In this case it is presupposed that the offerer of the Shélem is the host, and Jehovah the guest (Oehler, O. Test. Theology, ii. 8). But in the coming age, our author seems to imply, God Himself will be the host, and all—priests and laity alike—will be His guests, and receive the choicest gifts: He will require no sacrifice but a broken heart. A similar image occurs in Pirge Aboth, iii. 25, iv. 23 (ed. Taylor). In the latter passage, the present age ('olām, αἰών) is described as 'the vestibule' leading to the triclinium or banquet-hall, i.e., the age to come. The Messianic age was to be unending, and so too it is implied here that the feast will be (see v. 8).—To understand the full force of the image of the Shélem we must remember that the meal which followed the sacrifice was a highly lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well-strained. <sup>7</sup> And he shall annihilate in this mountain the covering which covereth all peoples, and the web which is woven over all nations; <sup>8</sup> he shall annihilate death for ever, and the Lord Jehovah shall wipe away tears from off all faces, and the reproach of his people shall he take away from off all the earth; for Jehovah hath spoken it. <sup>9</sup> And they shall say in that day, Behold, here is our God, for whom we have waited that he should save us; here is Jehovah, for whom we have waited; let us exult and rejoice in his salvation. <sup>10</sup> For the hand of Jehovah shall rest upon this moun-festive occasion. True, the eucharistic meals of the Jews, like those of the early Christians (1 Cor. xi. 21) often degenerated into sensual merry makings (1 Sam. i. 13, where Eli suspects Hannah of being drunk after a sacrificial meal, comp. v. 10; so too Prov. vii. 14-18), but moderate enjoyment was a duty (Deut. xii. 7). Obs. There is no analogy to this form of belief in Zoroastrianism.

—Wines on the lees] i.e., wine that has been left on its lees or sediment, to heighten its strength and flavour; comp. Jer. xlviii. 11, and see note in Lowth's Isaiah.

<sup>7</sup> The covering . . . nations] 'A net (i.e., mortality) is spread over all the living,' Pirke Aboth, iii. 16; comp. next verse. David 'wept as he went up, and had his head covered' (a sign of mourning), 2 Sam. xv. 30. 'Your (spiritual) eyes hath he closed, and your heads hath he covered,' Isa. xxix. 10. All these are in point, and we must not specialise too much. All 'darkness,' whether without or within, intercepts the 'light of Jehovah': 'especially death, for, from the old Hebrew point of view, 'in Death no man remembereth thee.' Comp. 2 Tim. i. 10, where death is described as a power or principle which overshadowed the world, till Jesus Christ 'abolished death and brought life and immortality to light.'

<sup>8</sup> Annihilate death] The promise belongs not only to the Jewish nation (as Hos. xiii. 14) as a community, but to all its believing individual members: this is a necessary inference from the individualising reference of the next clause ('. . . from off all faces'). Comp. on xxvi. 19. It is a different prospect which is held out for the citizens of the new Jerusalem in lxxv. 20. But even there the death which is still the portion of believers has completely lost its sorrowful associations. It is only to the wicked that it will be a curse. But why does the prophet add, He shall wipe away tears? What place is left for tears? Perhaps he remembers those to whom death comes as a blessing, who, as Job (iii. 21) and Dante (Inf. iii. 46) tell us, have the 'longing' and the 'hope' of death. He concludes with a special promise for the Jews, who, in their world-wide dispersion (comp. Joel iii. 2), were nowhere secure from the taunt, Where is thy God? (Ps. lxxix. 10). This reproach of his people shall he take away.

<sup>10-12</sup> A contrast. The happy state of the Jews is resumed in the words, For on this mountain shall the hand of Jehovah rest—protectingly (xi. 2) for his people, but vengefully for his enemies. True, the mightiest of these have been destroyed, but the petty foes of the Jews were regarded with intensified hatred. Hence the declaration, in a contemptuous figure drawn from common life, that Moab shall be trampled down in his place. The

tain, and Moab shall be trampled down in his place, as straw is trampled down in the water of a dung-pit ; <sup>11</sup> and <sup>a</sup> he shall spread out his hands within it, as a swimmer spreadeth out (his hands) to swim, but he shall abase his <sup>a</sup> pride together with the artifices of his hands. <sup>12</sup> And the fortifications of thy lofty walls shall he cast down, abase, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

latter words are not merely expletive ; they imply that Moab cannot possibly escape (Del.). Is there a historical background to this? Probably, though we are not able to determine it with precision. There are, it is true, some evidences of a friendly intercourse with Moab in the post-Isaianic period (Jer. xxvii. 3, xl. 11). But, on the other hand, we are told that bands of Moabites ravaged Judah during the reign of Jehoiakim (2 Kings xxiv. 2), and Moab is accused of maliciously triumphing at the ruin of their neighbours, Ezek. xxv. 8-11. Sanballat, too, was probably a Moabite (see on xv. 5).—Dung-pit] Hebr. madmēnah ; possibly an allusion to the local name Madmen, Jer. xlviii. 2, if we should not there read gam dimōn instead of gam madmen.

<sup>11</sup> Moab shall spread out his hands to prevent himself from sinking in the water. (Vit. and Dr. Kay, with Targ., A. E., &c., make Jehovah the subject. The image will then be analogous to that of 'riding on the high places,' but does not harmonise with the figure in v. 10).—His pride] Comp. on xvi. 6.—Artifices] Yet I rather doubt whether 'snares' can be so paraphrased. Is the text right?

<sup>12</sup> The fortifications]—Most explain this of Kir Moab, or of the cities of Moab in general ; Vit. and Ges., of Babylon. I think it refers at any rate to the 'city' mentioned in xxiv. 10-12, xxv. 2, and especially (note the expressions) xxvi. 5. It is possible that the verse is misplaced.

CHAPTER XXVI.

FUTURE glory, and the discipline by which it is obtained.

<sup>1, 2</sup> A third hymn. The picture is purely ideal. The new Jerusalem has no need of walls, and yet there is a mention of gates ; it is already rebuilt, and yet there is an invitation to those who are to inhabit it (Reuss). Ewald, it is true, thinks the gates are those of the temple (as Ps. cxviii. 19, 20), but there is the same (as I venture to think) happy inconsistency in lx. 11, 18.—Salvation] See note on xii. 2.

nation, that keepeth faithfulness, may enter in.' <sup>3</sup> A purpose established thou purposest—<sup>a</sup> peace, peace, for in thee is his trust. <sup>4</sup> Trust ye in Jehovah for ever, for in Jah Jehovah ye have a Rock of Ages. <sup>5</sup> For he hath cast down those who dwelt on high, the lofty city; he hath abased it, he hath abased it to the earth; he hath brought it even to the dust. <sup>6</sup> The foot trode it down, even the feet of the afflicted, the steps of the weak. <sup>7</sup> The path for the righteous is plain; thou makest plain with a level the path of the righteous. <sup>8</sup> Yea,

<sup>3</sup> A purpose established] 'Faithful is the saying' (1 Tim. i. 15). 'All his commandments are true; they are established (same word) for ever and ever' (Ps. cxi. 7, 8). 'For I know the thoughts which I think concerning you . . . thoughts of peace' (Jer. xxix. 11). Obs., throughout this first paragraph (vv. 1-4), the writer's mind is running on the security and immovableness of the new Jerusalem. This thread of thought is to some extent broken by alt. rendering, which has, however, in its favour the (only) apparent parallel of Ps. cxii. 7, 8, 'His heart is fixed, trusting in Jehovah: Established is his heart, he shall not be afraid.' The other passage sometimes quoted in its support is Phil. iv. 7, where A. V. has 'The peace of God . . . shall keep your hearts and minds,' but noûmata is rather 'purposes' (Ellicott, Alford). It may tempt some to compare the use of the word yetsar in later Hebrew, in which it is sometimes used synonymously with leb, a heart. But its proper meaning in such passages, which is almost always suitable, is 'impulse, desire.'—For purposest some would render 'keepest,' supposing a play on the two meanings of the verb—'keep' and 'frame'; this implies a violent rendering of the first two words,— 'Well-founded is the thought' (Calv., Hitz.).—Peace, peace] He refrains from epithets. Such peace is indescribable:—so lvii. 19.

<sup>5</sup> 'Rock' is a Divine title (xxx. 29). As a proof of Jehovah's right to it in all its manifold significance, the prophet points to the fate of the imperial city (as in xxiv.). Obs., the increased rapidity of movement in the style.—The feet of the afflicted] i.e., of God's people. The same word in Hebr. expresses poverty and humble-mindedness (the supposed distinction between 'ani and 'anân cannot be made out); the same word, plainness or straightness, and uprightness.

<sup>7</sup> Jehovah, who tolerates no obstacle on his own pathway (xl. 3, 4), will suffer none on that of his people. A plain path is theirs, free from trouble without and within. This is expressed in the style of the Proverbs; see Q. P. B. Prov. iii. 6, xi. 5, xv. 19, and the Hebr. of Prov. v. 6.—With a level] i.e., exactly, to a nicety.

<sup>8</sup> Again the lyric tone. The Church is the speaker. 'Indeed, knowing this—that thou hadst a hatred of all that exalted itself, we looked out for thee to traverse the earth in the path of thy judgments, those judgments' which, according to the prophets, were to open the Messianic period.—For thy name] i.e., almost 'for thy manifestation,' but 'name' means not so much an act of self-manifestation as that side of the Divine Being which is turned towards in the path of thy judgments, Jehovah ! we waited for thee ; for thy name and for thy memorial there was heartfelt desire.

<sup>9</sup> With my soul I desired thee in the night ; yea, with my spirit within me I sought thee earnestly ; for as soon as thy judgments come upon the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

man (comp. Ps. xx. 1, and see on xxx. 27, lxiii. 9). The term is common as a Divine title to Hebrew and Phœnician : comp. 'Astarte, name of Baal,' Inscr. of Eshmunazar (ed. Schlottmann), vii. 9, and see Last Words, vol. ii.—[Memorial] a synonym for name (so also in Assyrian), Ex. iii. 15, Ps. cxxxv. 13, comp. Hos. xii. 5.

<sup>9</sup> Soul : . . spirit] On the distinction, see Oehler, Old Test. Theology, i. 216–220.—[As soon as . . .] It was not, then, merely a selfish patriotism which moved the prophet, but a genuine interest in 'righteousness.' But this does not exhaust the meaning of the passage. It is the Messianic hope which we have before us. The spread of righteousness over the earth is connected with the coming of Jehovah to 'reign on mount Zion' (xxiv. 23), and this advent is to be ushered in by a series of judgments on the unbelievers and unrighteous. 'Righteous' = a worshipper of Jehovah ; 'unrighteous' virtually = heathen, see Del. on Ps. cxv. 3. Notice two indications of the point of time at which the author places himself : 1. The Jews are in constant intercourse with the heathen ; 2. They suffer, not merely by their political subjugation (v. 13), but by the moral gulf between themselves and the heathen. Compare the Psalms passim.

If judgment be withheld, the ungodly will not learn 'righteousness.'—[A land of rectitude] i.e., a place where the upright dwell. Ps. cxliii. 10 is not a parallel passage.

<sup>11</sup> Hath been lifted up] viz., against the enemies of Israel (comp. Ex. vi. 1).—[But they saw it not] 'See' has two meanings, 'to see' with the eyes, and 'to feel' with the whole nature. Both are united here : 'they saw it not,' because 'they felt it not,' not being the objects of those Divine judgments.—[Jealousy for the people] So 'the zeal of thy house' (Ps. lxxix. 9, A. V.) should be 'jealousy for thy house.' The clause means more exactly, They shall see what jealousy for a people (bound, as Israel is, to its God) means.

—[Fire] 'Shall thy jealousy burn like fire?' Ps. lxxix. 5, comp. Zeph. i. 18. Ewald strangely compares 2 Kings i. 10. Alt. rend. means, 'the fire with which thou punishest thy enemies.' But the analogy of 'jealousy for the people' now decides me against it. The construction adopted is, however, uncommon and harsh (see Knobel).—[Our work] The work of our deliverance.—[For us] The same thought is expressed in Ps. xc. 16, 17, where 'thy deed' = 'the work of our hands.'—In this and the next two verses, the prophet assumes the liberation of the Jews to have been accomplished.

thou wilt stablish peace for us, for all our work also thou hast wrought for us. <sup>13</sup> Jehovah our God ! other lords beside thee have had dominion over us ; only through thee do we celebrate thy name. <sup>14</sup> The dead live not (again), the shades rise not ; therefore thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish. <sup>15</sup> Thou hast increased the nation, Jehovah ! thou hast increased the nation ; thou hast won for thyself glory ; thou hast made distant all the boundaries of the land. <sup>16</sup> Jehovah ! in trouble they looked for <sup>13</sup> Other lords] Jehovah was the rightful 'lord' of Israel (comp. lxiii. 19) ; Nineveh and Babylon had usurped his place. Another view (Hitz. Oehler) is that 'lords' = gods. This involves interpreting 'the dead' in v. 14 of the generation of idolatrous Jews. In its favour may be urged the further light which the passage will then throw on the prophet's belief in the Resurrection. In v. 19 he exclaims, 'Thy dead (O Jehovah) shall arise,' i.e., the believing Israelites shall return to life, and help to people the regenerate earth. In v. 14 he prepares the way for this by excluding unbelievers from a share in the future bliss. On the ordinary explanation, the outburst of faith in v. 19 is a little abrupt, and revelation does not disdain those psychological processes by which the mind is fitted for fresh intuitions of Divine truth. Still I do not see how v. 14 can fairly be interpreted as Oehler (Old Test. Theology, ii. 393) proposes, and (unless by violent means) the latter half of v. 13 is incapable of being reconciled with his view.—Only through thee] Only through thine interposition. Comp. Ps. lvi. 4, 10.—Celebrate] The word may mean no more than 'invoke' (Ex. xxiii. 13), but more probably it implies thanksgiving for a benefit received, as Ps. xlv. 17 (18). Of course a mere invocation of Jehovah was possible during the Exile.

<sup>14, 15</sup> A sudden flight into the prophetic future. All foreign lords have passed away ; they are in the realm of the shades, from which—except by a miracle—none returns (Job xvi. 22) ; their very memory has perished. Cf. xiv. 22, Jer. li. 39. Meantime Jehovah has increased the population of Judah, and widely extended its borders (cf. xxxiii. 17). In fact, the territory occupied at first by the restored exiles was extremely limited ; the ideal was still in the future.—Therefore] i.e., with this result. Hebrew cannot clearly distinguish between that which merely contributes to a result and that which is worked purposely for that result : it has no word for 'consequently.' Comp. Winer, New Test. Gram., pp. 573-4, but obs. that this idiom occurs in some passages in which a theistic teleology cannot be traced.

<sup>16-18</sup> The prophet returns to the gloomy past and present.—Looked for thee] Or, remembered thee.—Poured out prayers] The rendering is doubtful, and the text has the appearance of corruption. Sept. has 'in small affliction (was) thy discipline unto us.' Altering a point, Böttcher renders the present text, 'affliction (was) the charm of thy discipline for them,' i.e., affliction acted like a charm by bringing them back under thy discipline. This, indeed, is not free from difficulty, but 'affliction' is probably the meaning of the first word, rendered above 'they poured out.' 'Charm' (for this, not 'prayers,' is the primary meaning of the second word) can hardly be right ; unless (assuming the late origin of the prophecy) the old word for 'charm' (iii. 3), or amulet (iii. 20), acquired some new meaning in the religion of the Captivity, possibly not unconnected with the Babylonian incantations. For not even a prophet can disengage himself from the phraseology and mental imagery of his age. The ordinary rendering 'whispered prayers' seems to me now unsuitable. In the next verse, the Jews are represented as crying out vehemently, and such, too, is the language of those psalms which seem to express the feelings of the exiles.

<sup>17</sup> As she who is with child] A figure for intense anxiety (as xiii. 8, xxi. 3). Contrast another figurative description, 'Before she travailed, she brought forth' (lxvi. 7). — Because of thee] i.e., because of thy hand (Jer. xv. 17).

<sup>18</sup> Wind] i.e., that which was futile and useless (xli. 29). Or there may be an allusion to apparent pregnancy, and its result (empneumatosis). — Salvation] i.e., thoroughly safe or prosperous. The following clause expresses the disappointment of the later Jews at the scanty population of Judea. I must again remark that the real or assumed period of the author is after the return from exile. — Inhabitants of the world] Perhaps this certainly strange expression alludes to the pre-eminent position soon to be enjoyed by the regenerate Israel in a regenerate world. — Were . . . produced] Lit., fell :—a unique expression for being born (see, however, Wisd. vii. 3, and comp. the use of πάρω and Arab. saqata, Ges.). We do meet (e.g., Job iii.

16) with the substantive 'that which falls' (nefel) for 'a birth,' but only in the sense of an 'untimely birth.' The prophet selects the term to express the abnormal and violent character of this second birth of the deceased Israelites (see next verse). So Oehler, Old Test. Theology, ii. 396.

<sup>19</sup> Thy dead] Contrast v. 14, 'the dead (oppressors) live not again.' — Shall live] i.e., live again. The late Hebrew for the Resurrection is ʿkhiyyath hammélim, 'the revival of the dead.' 'Sublimely recovering himself, the prophet cries that God's saints, though they are dead, shall live' (M. Arnold), and shall share the duties and the privileges of regenerate Israel. The passage has a strong affinity to Hos. vi. 2: 'After two days will he revive us; on the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight,' and Ezek. xxxvii. 1-10 (the 'dry bones'). The three passages agree in connecting the Resurrection with the circumstances of the Jewish community. This is very clear in Hosea and Ezekiel, but is hardly less certain in the passage before us. It is as 'my dead body' (or, 'the part of me that has faded and fallen off me') that the departed Israelites are summoned from the underworld. The difference is that the descriptions in Hosea and Ezekiel are allegorical (comp. Hos. vi. 1, Ezek. xxxvi. 27, xxxvii. 11-14), whereas the whole context of our passage (especially v. 14) shows that the language of the writer is to be taken literally. It is in fact an expression of faith in a resurrection, though

in a resurrection as exceptional as those of which we read in the Books of Kings. On the question of the relation of the Biblical doctrine of the Resurrection to the Zoroastrian, I have spoken elsewhere (J. C. A., p. 130). I will only add, that we must not quote the covert opposition to Dualism which most critics find in xlv. 7 (see, however, note) as conclusive against the origination of the doctrine of the Resurrection in Persia. For the doctrine of Dualism is plainly inconsistent with Monotheism ; that of the Resurrection is not. (Comp. Geiger, Jüd. Zeitschrift, 1872, p. 270.) Why, moreover, hunt for Persian affinities? The Babylonians too believed in the Resurrection ; they ascribed it to the favour of Marduk, who (as a solar deity) himself died and rose again. See Hymn to Marduk, Lenormant, Les premières civilisations, ii. 177-8. I do not, of course, dream of claiming a Babylonian origin for the doctrine. Psychologically speaking, the revelation of it to the Israelites was prepared for by their earnest belief in retribution. Rewards and punishments for good and evil conduct being so imperfectly awarded in this life, faith inferred a second, and life to be complete required a body. Besides, the vague and incidental character of the reference in this passage is of itself a warrant of its underived origin. And now to return to the prophet. If the reader has any further doubt as to the meaning of the passage, let him refer to lxvi. 7-9, Ezek. xxxvi. 38, which prove how much the prophetic writers dwelt on the question of the repopulation of the sacred territory. Comp. also Prof. Drummond's remarks, The Jewish Messiah, p. 361.

—[My dead bodies] The Heb. is in the sing., collectively (as Lev. xi. 11, Ps. lxxix. 2).—[Awake and cry] Lively faith anticipating the event.—[Thy dew . . .] The 'dew' here corresponds to the life-giving 'wind' in Ezek. xxxvii., as the 'dead bodies' here to the 'dry bones' there. The figure may be expanded thus:—The vivifying energy of Jehovah is like dew—not the common dew, but 'dew of lights,' i.e., the essential, supernatural light (comp. James i. 17, Del.), which according to the primitive belief, Hebrew, Egyptian, Persian, Indian, existed before the sun (see Gen. i. 3, Job xxxviii. 19, xxv. 3, and comp. art. 'Cosmogony,' Encyclop. Britannica, ninth ed.). Light and life are correlative ideas—Ps. xxxvi. 9, Job iii. 16-20, John i. 4 ; but light is a more pictorial expression, and a more suitable companion for dew. The prophet means to say, 'Thy dew, O Jehovah, is so full of the light of life that it even draws forth the shades from the dark womb of the underworld.' Alt. rend. means 'a dew like that which falls upon plants' ; comp. Hos. xiv. 5, Ps. lxxii. 6.—[The earth shall produce] Lit., cause to fall (comp. v. 18). The earth is likened to a devouring monster, Num. xiii. 32, Ezek. xxxvi. 13, like Sheól (see on v. 14).

<sup>30</sup> The rapture is over, and the prophet returns to the sober present. He has gained on behalf of his people the comforting certitude that a great exhibition of the Divine justice is on the point of taking place ; and his counsel is to withdraw from the doomed world into the privacy of communion with God (Ps. xxvii. 5, xxxi. 21, Del.). For even the righteous man shall only 'live in virtue of his

lel passage, x. 25.

<sup>21</sup> For behold, &c.] The same expressions in Mic. i. 3.—shall disclose . . . her slain] The latter clause by itself might be taken as a prediction of a resurrection ; but with the words which precede it, it can only be taken as a strong expression for the inner necessity of vengeance for blood. Comp. Gen. iv. 11, Job xvi. 18. A fine application in Macaulay, vii. 33 (field of Landen). The whole stress of the verse lies on the punishment of the actually existing inhabitants of the earth.—The description of the judgment follows in the next chapter.

CHAPTER XXVII.

<sup>1</sup> Further details on 'that day,' expressed, with the fearless security characteristic of the prophets, in phraseology of mythic origin. The object is to throw into relief the terribleness of Jehovah's vengeance, which is effected by clothing the announcement in language originally used of the storm-cloud. The sword of Jehovah (xxxi. 8, xxxiv. 5, lxvi. 16, Deut. xxxii. 41, 42, Jer. xii. 12, xlv. 10, xlvii. 6, l. 35-38, Ezek. xxi. 9 (14), Zech. xiii. 7, Judg. vii. 20, comp. Josh. v. 13) is described more fully in Gen. iii. 24 as the 'turning sword by the cherubim,' and the cherub is undoubtedly a symbol connected with the storm-cloud (see Encycl. Brit., art. 'Cherubim'). The Babylonians had their parallel (as was first shown by Lenormant<sup>1</sup>) in the sword of fifty points and seven heads belonging to the god Marduk, which obviously means the lightning. The other imagery of the verse belongs to the same order of conceptions. It is impossible to help comparing the fourth tablet of the Babylonian creation-story, which describes the fight between Marduk and the dragon Tiamat or Tiamtu ('the deep,' like Hebr. š'kôm), the personification of disorder, who dwelt in the sea. Indeed, the Book of Job, so full of allusions to mythology, also furnishes a parallel ; we read in xxvi. 12, 13,—

By his power he hath stirred up the sea,
And by his skill he hath smitten Rahab ;
By his breath the heavens become serene,
His hand hath pierced through the flying serpent.

Rahab in the second line is synonymous with the cloud- or storm-dragon :—this is certain both from its being placed parallel with 'the flying serpent' (flying, that is, from the sun or from the lightning) in line 4, and from Isa. li. 9 (see note). It is hardly less certain that 'the sea' in the first line is the upper

the leviathan the wreathed serpent, and he shall slay the dragon in the sea. <sup>2</sup>In that day—'the pleasant vineyard'—sing ye of it. <sup>3</sup>I Jehovah am its keeper; moment by moment I water it; lest any should invade it, by night and by day I keep it. <sup>4</sup><sup>b</sup> Wrath have I none<sup>b</sup>; might I but have ocean in its dark, cloudy reservoir (Job ix. 8, Ps. xxxiii. 7, comp. Job xxvi. 8), above which Jehovah sitteth (Ps. civ. 3); otherwise the first line will be inconsistent with the rest (comp. also Ps. lxxxix. 9, 10). So here in Isa. xxvii. The two leviathans, or 'coilers,' and the dragon, are slightly varying mythic expressions for the storm- and rain-cloud, the enemy of the sun and of light. And the prophet means to say that just as Jehovah is supreme in the physical heaven, and keeps the sky-dragon, that is, the ungenial, cloudy darkness, within bounds, so He is supreme in the moral heaven, and prevents 'the prince of the power of the air'—the personification of evil and disorder—from exceeding his permitted functions (Job i. 12).<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, too, he means to say that there is a connection between these physical, or physico-moral, and moral spheres of rebellion, just as in xxiv. 21 the Divine visitation is held upon the host of the heavenly patronisers and the host of the earthly patronised.—Most critics think that three particular kingdoms are referred to under these symbolic phrases—Assyria, Babylon, and Egypt, or Egypt, Assyria, and Tyre, or Media, Persia, and Egypt. It is true, the dragon is elsewhere an emblem of Egypt, li. 9, Ezek. xxix. 3, xxxii. 2, Ps. lxxiv. 13 ('the dragons'); but so also, close to one of these passages, is the leviathan (Ps. lxxiv. 13, 14). If anyone chooses, therefore, to say that all three phrases mean Egypt, he cannot be refuted; and yet I think it is safer, considering xxiv. 21, not to limit the number of the hostile kingdoms to one or even to three. The number is perhaps chosen to correspond to the triple description of the sword of Jehovah at the beginning of the verse.—~~Mard~~ i.e., well-tempered ('cruel,' as Gen. xlix. 7, suits the context less).

<sup>2</sup> Here the bright side of the judgment begins:—Israel is received back into favour. Prophecy passes into song. Possibly the words 'shall this song be sung' have fallen out, and yet it may be urged that the abbreviation of the opening formula is in keeping with the rush of the song. This abruptness of style makes the work of exposition very difficult. The first verse of the song, no doubt, is clear. Jehovah is the speaker; he declares that he will in person be the guardian of his vineyard (cf. on i. 8). But v. 4, at any rate the first clause of it, seems very loosely connected; indeed, it evidently introduces a new cycle of ideas. Then again the second and following clauses seem hardly consistent with the first:—no wrath, and yet a hostile aggression on the part of Jehovah! Then, in v. 5, protection and peace are offered to certain persons, apparently to the same who are indicated by the phrase 'briars and thorns.' And yet elsewhere 'thorns' are the symbols of an obstinacy destined for destruction (comp. x. 17, xxxiii. 12, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6, 7, Nah. i. 10). Lowth evades the difficulty by rendering in v. 1 'sing briars and thorns before me! with war would I stride against them, I would burn them up together; <sup>5</sup> else he must <sup>6</sup> take asylum in me <sup>7</sup> (and) <sup>8</sup> make peace with me.' <sup>9</sup> In (days) to come Jacob shall take root, Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit.

ye a responsive song' (comp. Ex. xv. 21: same verb apparently, but different conjugation); reading 'wall' instead of 'wrath' in v. 4, and distributing the song antiphonally—an attractive theory, but not entirely consistent with the present text. Drechsler regards the song as the counterpart of the song and oracle in v. 1-7. 'There the Lord pronounced a judgment of rejection upon Israel, using the figure of the vineyard; in our passage he declares that he receives his people back, and takes the parable of the vineyard for his theme.' This view seems to me correct; it enables us to give a reasonable exegesis, though it does not entirely remove the suspicion that the present text may contain some errors.—Wrath have I none] i.e., I have no longer any wrath towards it.—Briars and thorns] i.e., those referred to in v. 6, only that what is there an unexplained detail of the parable has here become a speaking figure for the hostile peoples, which, like parasitical plants, have overrun God's heritage. There is therefore a combined reference to v. 6 and x. 17.

<sup>5</sup> Or else . . . ] A truly evangelical belief that God is willing to be reconciled even to His enemies. Its presence here gives the prophecy a spiritual superiority over the other prophetic descriptions of the judgment upon the hostile nations, e.g., lxi. 16. Even according to xix. 22 Egypt must be first smitten in order that it may be healed.—Take asylum in me] Let him take sanctuary in the Name of Jehovah, which is 'a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it and is safe' (Prov. xviii. 10); in short, let him become a believing servant of Jehovah. 'Fortress' in alt. rend. would be a symbolical name for a protecting deity, as xvii. 10, Ps. lii. 7 (9).

<sup>7, 8</sup> The prophet returns to the point of view adopted at xxvi. 8. He reminds his people of the moderation with which Jehovah has treated them. Their punishment, however painful, was not so severe as that of their enemies.—His smiter] Comp. x. 20.—His slayers] No critic can be surprised at the misplacing of a Váv. The received reading is most obscure. It ought to mean the slain Israelites, but this is clearly against the context; so the commentators perforce explain it of the enemies of the theocracy, slain either by Jehovah (Del.) or by Israel (Knob., Naeg., &c.).

<sup>9</sup> In exact measure] 'Dealing out punishment in carefully adjusted quantities' (Kay). Lit., 'in a seah, a seah'; a seah is  $\frac{1}{4}$  of an ephah (see on v. 10), and therefore a very small measure. A singular phrase-

<sup>9</sup> An inference from the Divine moderation. Jehovah has only banished, not destroyed, his people, consequently repentance is still possible, and Jehovah will mercifully accept this repentance as an atonement for guilt.—On these terms] viz., of destroying the emblems of idolatry. Rend. as in Gen. xxxiv. 15, 22, 1 Sam. xi. 2.<sup>1</sup> Alt. rend. seems hardly in accordance with prophetic theology (see on xxii. 14), at least if 'hereby' means 'by undergoing his punishment of captivity.' The next clause is difficult: we should expect, 'And the putting away of his sin is entirely the fruit of this.' But there is a meaning in this violation of the parallelism. In one sense (i.e., from a human point of view) Israel's repentance was the cause; in another (i.e., from a divine point of view) it was the result, of his forgiveness. Justice and mercy are combined in the removal of guilt, according to the Old Test. as well as the New. Obs., too, that 'guilt' and 'sin' are parallel, as in v. 18.

—That Ashérah's . . .] The mention of the symbols of Ashérah (see on xvii. 8) is not what we should expect from a writer living during the Babylonian exile. The phenomenon is, of course, not decisive of the critical question at issue, but ought to have its due weight.

<sup>10</sup> Very different meantime shall be the fate of the world's metropolis. Its fortifications shall be razed; its population 'dismissed' (into exile or to Sheól); its only visitors pasturing flocks, and women in search of wood. Calv., Ges., Del., Knob. think the fortified city is Jerusalem, but surely the context is against this view. It is true that the Jews are said to be without knowledge in i. 3, and that Jehovah is their 'former' (xliii. 1), but the same things are said of the heathen (xliv. 17, Ps. lxxxvi. 9). The irremediableness of the ruin, expressed analogically by the 'unmercifulness' of Jehovah, certainly suits a great heathen city better than Jerusalem:—Jon. iv. 11 stands unique in the Old Test.—Dismissed] i.e., deprived of its inhabitants.

<sup>11</sup> Its twigs] i.e., those of the bushes which will grow up wild on the site of the now levelled city (comp. vii. 25). A striking contrast to the parks and gardens which an Oriental city enclosed within its limits.—For the suppression of the noun of the genitive, comp. v. 14.

twigs are dry, they shall be broken off; women shall come and set them on a blaze: for it is not a people of understanding; therefore he who made it hath no compassion upon it, and he who formed it sheweth it no favour. <sup>12</sup> And it shall come to pass in that day, that Jehovah shall beat out <sup>1</sup>(corn) from the <sup>2</sup>swelling stream <sup>2</sup> of the River unto the torrent of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, ye children of Israel. <sup>13</sup> And it shall come to pass in that day that a great trumpet shall be blown; and those shall come who were lost in the land of Assyria, and outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship Jehovah, in the holy mountain, in Jerusalem.

<sup>12, 13</sup> A concluding prophecy of comfort. Here again there are great difficulties of interpretation. The point of view assumed in the rest of the chapter is in the midst of a period of exile—as most critics believe, the Babylonian exile. But the point of view in these two verses is that of Isaiah, in whose time Assyria and Egypt were Israel's principal foes, and who distinctly anticipates that when Jehovah interposes 'the second time' his people will be dispersed chiefly in Assyria and Egypt. I venture to hold confidently that these verses must be explained entirely on the analogy of xi. 11-16.—Ges. however thinks that the Euphrates and the Wady el-Arish are here the extreme boundaries of the promised land of Israel (Gen. xv. 18, 1 Kings viii. 65), and that the passage means that Jehovah will people the kingdom in its fullest extent as rapidly and numerous as berries fall from the olive-trees. —Beat out] As a more careful plan than threshing (comp. Judg. vi. 11, Ruth ii. 17). — A great trumpet] The same signal for a Divine interposition as in xviii. 3, comp. xi. 12, Matt. xxiv. 31. — Outcasts] Same phrase as in xi. 12.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

A GLANCE at the sad fate of Samaria, followed by an invective against the frivolity, perversity, and superstition of the ruling classes of Judah, and closed by a persuasive parable. The chapter divides naturally at v. 14 and v. 23. It must be taken in connection with the four, if not five, following chapters, which were probably circulated together among the disciples and adherents of Isaiah as a separate work. It is true, they have no heading, but their Isaianic origin and—in spite of some slight differences in the chronological data—their close connection (especially that of xxix.-xxxii.) cannot for a moment be called in question. They were evidently delivered at various stages of the Assyrian intervention under Sargon (see on chaps. x. 5, &c., and xx.).

'The most noteworthy feature of this important group of discourses is the wise distinction everywhere made between the various classes of opponents. Isaiah well knew that the mass of the people erred rather from weakness and fear than intentionally, and that only individual defiantly rash 'princes' had so miserably gone astray in their aims and calculations. He therefore varies his tone and manner, according as he addresses the leaders of the nation or the people themselves. In the first case, the Divine words come from his mouth with a crushing force; in the second, they are full of gentle seriousness and hope' (Ewald). This variety of tone is specially exhibited in chap. xxviii.

* So many MSS. ; TEXT, the Lord.

<sup>1</sup> Isaiah opens with a woe upon Samaria. He has before now said (viii. 6, comp. Mic. i. 6, &c.) that the storm of judgment must first break upon Samaria, and then upon Jerusalem—not merely for geographical reasons, but because the spiritual condition of both cities is similar. He mentions drunkenness, not as the root of the national evil, but rather as its flower. The appalling thing is that when all is on the point of collapsing, those responsible for the state should be given up to self-indulgence. Comp. Hos. vii. 5 and Am. iv. 1 (Samaria), Am. vi. 4-6 (Zion and Samaria).—The proud crown . . . ] 'Isaiah fuses into one image the heads of the nation, crowned with flowers at their habitual debauches, and the capital cities—Samaria and Jerusalem(?)<sup>1</sup>—each reposing in its fertile valley, and crowned with a chaplet of towers intertwined with vines and olives' (Strachey). The luxury of Samaria reflects itself in the tribute of Jehu to Shalmaneser, which includes bowls, cups, bottles, and vessels of gold (Smith, Assyrian Canon, p. 114).—Smitten down by wine] Comp. on xvi. 8.

glittering crown, and for a brave diadem unto the remnant of his people, <sup>6</sup> and for a spirit of judgment to him who sitteth on the judgment-seat, and for valour to those who turn back war to the gate. <sup>7</sup> But even these reel with wine and stagger with strong drink; priest and prophet reel with strong drink, they are swallowed up through wine, they stagger with strong drink; they reel in the vision, they totter in judgment. <sup>8</sup> For all tables are full of filthy vomit, so that no place is left. <sup>9</sup> Whom would he teach knowledge, and whom would he make to understand the Tidings? Those who are weaned from the milk, and separated from the breasts? <sup>10</sup> For (it is) 'command remnant of his people] The meaning is not very clear. Does 'his people' include Judah as well as Israel, or only Israel? The analogy of viii. 6 makes it probable that the former view is correct, though the promise is doubtless inserted here out of fairness to Ephraim, which still had its standing-ground in Jehovah's covenant. But we must evidently supplement the promise from x. 21. It is a converted 'remnant' of which the prophet speaks.

<sup>7</sup> Here the prophet seems to be summing up a fresh cycle of prophecies.—A scene worthy of Samaria is being enacted in Jerusalem (comp. Am. vi. 1-7, Mic. ii. 11). Priests and prophets come visibly drunk (from the sacrificial feasts? see on xxv. 6) to their most solemn functions of judgment (see above) and prophecy. Isaiah refers of course to the lower order of pro-

<sup>9, 10</sup> The drunkards mocking Isaiah over their cups. Does he not know what respectable persons he is dealing with, not like children who need leading strings, but educated priests and prophets? They have caught up from Isaiah one of his favourite words (probably), and repeat it with a sneer—viz., Tidings, i.e., revelation, that which the prophet has 'heard from Jehovah' v. 22, comp. xxi. 10). The word occurs again in this sense in v. 19, liii. 1, Ob. 1. It is from these passages that ἀκού gets its peculiar meaning in Rom. x. 16, 17. Knowledge is also a term for the prophetic preaching, i. 3, xxxiii. 6. [I am not sure that the above interpretation (Ew., Del., Naeg.) is correct; it is at any rate possible and worthy. Others take 'weaned from the milk' as an allegory either of simplicity of faith (Kay) or of the very opposite of this (Weir), omitting of course the interrogation.]

—For (it is) command upon command . . .] He is always interfering with his moral and (see v. 12) political recommendations; always finding some 'little' point to censure and correct. Comp. the word used by Micah's opponents, 'Do not go on dropping', an old phrase for prophesying with a new unfavourable implication (Mic. ii. 6). The monosyllabic forms in the Hebr. <sup>14</sup> Therefore hear the word of Jehovah, ye men of scorn, rulers of this people which is in Jerusalem. <sup>15</sup> Because ye present at once the stammer of a drunkard, and the monotonous character attributed to Isaiah's teaching.

<sup>11</sup> The prophet retorts their own language upon them. Yes; it shall be in fact as you say. This childish monotone shall indeed sound in your ears. The description which you give of the revelations of Jehovah shall be exactly applicable to the harsh, laconic commands of a merciless invader. For Assyrian, although closely allied to Hebrew, was sufficiently different from it both in grammar and in vocabulary to seem a 'stammering' or 'barbarous' tongue to Isaiah's contemporaries. The common diplomatic and commercial language of Syria and Assyria was Aramaic (see xxxvi. 11).—Shall he speak] The Assyrians being God's instruments. So xxix. 3: 'I will lay siege against thee.'—This is the rest] i.e., the true rest. Isaiah practically grants the monotony, or rather uniformity, of his preaching. But there was but one remedy for the evils of the time. 'Through returning and rest shall ye be saved' (xxx. 15). It was the 'rest,' not of passive obedience to Assyria, but of hearty faith in Jehovah, which he recommended. Comp. Mic. ii. 10, Jer. vi. 16.

<sup>14-22</sup> Jehovah pronounces judgment. He addresses—not the king, who is passed over in silence in most of the Hezekian discourses of Isaiah (comp. on vii. 2)—but the 'rulers,' the politicians. These are designated men of scorn (comp. v. 22, and xxix. 20). The title 'scorners' seems to be given in Proverbs to those who opposed or despised the counsels of the 'wise men,' and broke through the restraints of law and religion (comp. Prov. xv. 12, xxi. 24). Mere politicians were 'scorners' to Isaiah and Hosea (vii. 5).—The divine oracle has two aspects, like that addressed upon a similar occasion to Ahaz:—it holds forth at once a curse and a blessing. The ruling classes at Jerusalem had secured themselves, as they thought, by an Egyptian alliance (only, it is true, in its first stage as yet) against any damage to themselves from an Assyrian invasion. A policy of 'lying,' which would avenge itself upon its authors! Only those who trusted in Zion's 'foundation-stone' would hold their ground. The vacillation of the politicians has excited Isaiah's indignation. First, they have acted a 'lie' against Jehovah by calling in Assyria (2 Kings xvi. 7); next they shift their confidence from Assyria to Egypt (comp. Jer. ii. 17-19).

sion to denote perfect security from evil and mischief of any sort. Job v. 23, Hos. ii. 18, Lucan ix. 894 (of the Psylli: Pax illis cum morte data est). Lowth.—Obs., the 'scorners' or free-thinkers have retained a strong belief in the infernal powers, Death and Sheól (see on xxxviii. 18), though little enough in those supernal.—The flooding scourge] A mixture of metaphors. 'Scourge,' as in x. 26; 'flooding,' with a sceptical reference to the prophecy of the 'overflowing waters,' which shall 'sweep along into Judah' (viii. 7, 8), or to similar prophecies.

<sup>16</sup> Behold, I will found in Zion a stone] (See crit. note). To understand the form of this prophecy, we must recollect the enormous size and cost of the foundation-stones of Eastern public buildings:—comp. Job xxxviii. 6 'who cast (as a trifling burden) the earth's foundation-stone,' 1 Kings v. 17 'great stones, costly stones, hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house.' But what is this 'stone'? Isaiah cannot mean to connect the peace and security of Zion (or of the pious Israel) with a material stone. He has told us elsewhere that Jehovah is, on the one hand, 'the Rock of Israel' (xxx. 29); on the other, 'a stone to fall against' to many nominal Israelites. Jehovah then must be meant here. There may, indeed, be an allusion to the old popular superstition which attached a peculiar sanctity to sacred stones (e.g., at Delphi and Troy), but if so, Isaiah only alludes to it to discountenance it. It is not said 'he who believeth on the stone shall not give way,' but simply 'he who believeth':—now the object of absolute faith can be but one, Jehovah. But the foundation-stone of the temple in the solid rock of Zion (from which the mosque called Kubbet es-sakhrâ, or 'the dome of the rock,' derives its name) might well be regarded as a type of the unchangeableness of that temple's God. This view is confirmed by the peculiar introductory form of expression, 'I will found in Zion'; it is the manifestation of the Divine faithfulness towards believers which is meant. Jehovah will in Zion verify his revealed character. The security of believers will justify their faith, even as the permanence of the temple-building verifies the solidity of the foundation (comp. especially xiv. 32). There is perhaps an allusion in Ps. cxviii. 22.—Shall not give way] The text-reading does not suit the connection. Sept., Targ., Pesh., feeling that something was wrong, render freely 'shall not be put to shame' (see crit. note).

<sup>17-19</sup> In contrast to Zion's immobile saxum, all other subjects of confidence shall be swept away.—For trampling upon] So again of the Assyrian invasion, x. 6.—Take you away] The image is that of a flood, which carries off more and more human hiding-place <sup>d</sup> of falsehood <sup>d</sup> shall waters flood away ; <sup>18</sup> and your covenant with Death shall be <sup>e</sup> annulled, and your agreement with Sheól shall not stand : the flooding scourge, when it passeth along—ye shall be unto it for trampling upon ; <sup>19</sup> as often as it passeth along, it shall take you away, for morning by morning shall it pass along, by day and by night ; and it shall be simply a terror to understand the Tidings. <sup>20</sup> [ <sup>f</sup> For too short is the bed for one to stretch himself out at length, and too narrow the covering when one wrappeth himself in it. <sup>f</sup> ] <sup>21</sup> For Jehovah shall arise as on mount Perazim, he shall be stirred as in the valley of Gibeon ; to do his work—alien is his work, and to carry out his task—strange is his task. <sup>22</sup> And now—behave not as scorers, lest your bonds become fixed, for final and decisive is that which I have heard (coming) from the Lord, Jehovah Sabáoth, over all the land.

victims at each time of its appearance. Repeated Assyrian invasions. — To understand the Tidings ] A clear reference to v. 9. Men shall then understand but too well the ' Tidings ' which they once scorned. Or, perhaps, on the analogy of v. 13 ; As they refused a spoken revelation, they shall be compelled to understand the preaching of facts.

<sup>21</sup> Perazim . . . Gibeon ] Scenes of David's victories over the Philistines ; see 2 Sam. v. 20 ( ' Baal of Perazim, ' because the hill was surmounted by a sanctuary of Baal), 25 (Geba), 1 Chr. xiv. 16 (Gibeon). Ew. however denies this reference, and thinks, rather, of the events of Josh. x. 10 (the natural phenomena suit our prophecy, comp. vv. 2, 17). But both may be combined. — Alien is his work ] ' Alien, ' such as might be understood if worked upon foreigners, but not upon Jehovah's ' peculiar ' people. See on i. 7, and comp. Job xxxi. 3, A. V. ' a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity ' (see Hebr.) ; also Jer. ii. 14. ' His work, ' i.e., his work of judgment, as x. 12, Ps. lxiv. 9, Hab. i. 5.

<sup>22</sup> Again an appeal to the politicians, who are ambitious of breaking the bonds of the Assyrian yoke (x. 27, Nah. i. 13), and who scorn the prophet of ill-tidings. But this is only the way to fix their bonds, and, even worse than this, to invite certain destruction.—The closing words recur in x. 23, suggesting the nearly contemporaneous origin of both prophecies.

course. The style is gnomic—that of the so-called Khokma or 'wisdom'-literature; obs. especially the word rendered 'wisdom,' which occurs ten times in the ethical books of Proverbs and Job. Comp. xxxii. 6-8, which is also in the gnomic style, and xxix. 24 (see note). The inference is that the literary style of the prophet was influenced by that of his less purely religious fellow-teachers, the 'wise men.'—The parable which follows admits of more than one interpretation. We may suppose (a) that its object is to comfort believers. The operations of ploughing and threshing are a silent sermon, teaching those who have the inner ear the meaning of Israel's tribulations. The delicate fennel-flower is not threshed, neither does Jehovah thresh his people; or if some wise purpose leads him now and then to do so, he does not crush them to pieces, his object being to purify, and not to destroy. (So Drechsler, Del., Naeg.)—Or (b) with Ewald, we may view it as a final appeal to the politicians. 'The husbandman does nothing without regard to its proper manner and measure. Ye magnates and philosophers, who imagine yourselves to be far more than a husbandman, will ye observe no moderation and propriety? will ye go on in your wild, irrational life?' It would be fatal to agriculture to desert its sacred traditions (see on v. 26); and equally fatal will it be to you to scorn the constantly proffered advice of Jehovah's prophet. Even the politician cannot disregard religious sanctions and traditions. If we adopt (a), we must suppose the notes of a fresh prophecy to have been tacked on to the foregoing; if (b), we have a justification which has till now been withheld of the 'rule upon rule' complained of by the 'scorners.' I now prefer the latter, with Robertson Smith and Wellhausen.—On the agricultural allusions in this section see Mr. Houghton's papers on the botany of the Bible in the Bible Educator. In the rendering vetches, I follow Wetzstein ap. Del. ed. 2, p. 705. Apparently a kind of vetch was planted round the fields of grain as a protecting border—obviously a much more suitable border than one of spelt, the most delicate of the cereals. According to Wetzstein, the ricinus is still cultivated with this object.

Not only the soil, but the seed, is in a certain sense 'chastised' or 'corrected,' regard being had in each case to the character of the seed. Comp. Jer. xxx. 11, xlv. 28, where the same phrase occurs. Del.'s rend. seems less natural and forcible, though it has the support of the older interpreters.—[Instructing him] From Jehovah proceed the unwritten laws alike of social custom and of agricultural operations. ## CHAPTER XXIX.

A SUMMARY of two discourses. Vv. 1-12 contain the riddle of Ariel and its explanation; vv. 13-24 a prediction of a sweeping judgment on the untheoretically-minded members of the church-nation. In the latter part (v. 15) we meet with the first allusion to the negotiations with Egypt, which are more distinctly denounced in chaps. xxx. xxxi. The politicians as well as the prophet are awake to the pressing danger from Assyria, but the efforts of the former being but worldly-wise will utterly fail. Within a year, says the prophet, 'Ariel' will be reduced to extremities. In xxxii. 9-20 the interval allowed is slightly longer.—Isaiah implies that his unsusceptible hearers did not well understand his language; no wonder, then, if we find it difficult, even in the light of a sympathetic and comparative study of his works.

—Ariel] One of Isaiah's favourite symbolic names (comp. Rahab, Valley of Vision, &c.), and signifying either God's hearth or altar, or more probably (see crit. note) God's Lion (Ewald, 'Lioness'); comp. Gen. xlix. 9, Ezek. xix. 2, 3. From one point of view, Jehovah is Jerusalem's Lion (xxxii. 4); from another, Jerusalem is Jehovah's Lion.<sup>2</sup> Why not, then, Arijah (Lion of Jehovah)? Probably because the form Ariel was already in use (xxxiii. 7, 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, comp. Gen. xli. 16, Num. xxvi. 17). Parallels for this symbolic name of Jerusalem abound in the Assyrian inscriptions. Thus in the Monolith Inscription of Shalmaneser we find 'the city of Nappigi' endowed with the second name, 'The Law of Assur,' and 'the city of Rugulit' also called 'The Command (of Assur)'; R. P., iii. 92. So too at Babylon the two great walls were called respectively Imgur-Bel or 'Bel is gracious,' and Nimitti-Bel, or 'Foundation of Bel' (Delitzsch, Wo lag das Paradies? p. 215). Comp. also Isa. xix. 18 if 'City of the Sun' be the right reading.—Encamped] i.e., not in a hostile sense, as Sir E. Strachey, following Sept. and Vulg., but = dwelt (comp. the added notion of 'strength and security' (Dr. Weir).—Add year to year] This may mean either, Complete one more year; or merely, Enter upon the new year. Probably the latter, since 1. 'Add ye' implies a solemn act on the part of the persons addressed, such, for instance, as the celebration of the new moon of the first month; and 2. the phrase can thus be harmonised with the analogous description in a later passage, xxxii. 10. [Wellhausen, Gesch. Israels, i. 98, supposes the interval allowed here by the prophet before the siege to be the same as in xxxii. 10. This implies that xxxii. 9-20 is a part of the same discourse as chap. xxix., which is highly improbable, considering the varied contents of the intermediate prophecy].—Run their round] A cognate noun is used for the closing of the cycle of feasts, Ex. xxxiv. 22.

<sup>5</sup> But the multitude . . .] Dr. Kay prefers 'and' to 'but,' on the ground that 'a comparison of vv. 4, 6, shows that v. 5 must still relate to the humiliation of Jerusalem.' The continuity of the discourse is at first sight in favour of this view; but the expression 'thy strangers' (i.e., thy foes), cannot easily be reconciled with it. The simplicity with which v. 5 is appended to v. 4, is, perhaps, a rhetorical artifice to heighten the contrast. Comp. the way in which vii. 17 is attached to vii. 13-16.

<sup>7, 8</sup> Twofold application of the figure of a dream. The enemies of Zion shall come to nothing, like a dream; they shall also be

dreameth, and behold! he eateth; but he waketh, and his soul is empty; and as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold! he drinketh; but he waketh, and behold! he is faint, and his soul craveth: so shall it be with the multitude of all the nations which go to war against mount Zion.

<sup>9</sup> The hearers stare in astonishment at a prophecy seemingly so out of relation to facts. The prophet warns them that if they wilfully deaden their spiritual faculties, there will be no emerging afterwards from this state of blindness and stupefaction. Jehovah will judicially fix them in it.—Astonish yourselves] Implying that the state is self-caused. So Hab. i. 5. It is mainly the ruling class which is addressed, hence the prophet says, They are drunken, but not with wine, alluding to xxviii. 7.

<sup>10, 11</sup> They are thus spiritually asleep, with eyes closed, and heads wrapped up (in Oriental fashion). Not only the revelation in vv. 1-8, but the whole body of Isaiah's prophecy, is become non-existent to them. Their eyes that seem to see are baffled entirely by Isaiah's 'vision.' This is further illustrated by a comparison. The educated portion of the ruling class, having a mere secular intelligence, is like a man who is asked to read a book, but is unable to 'loose the seals' (Rev. v. 2). We may fairly infer from this passage that prophecies of Isaiah were already circulated in a written form. The words inserted after 'eyes' and 'heads' in Hebr. text throw the whole passage into confusion. The word 'you' in v. 10 must mean the same persons as 'yourselves' in v. 9, viz. the ruling class, including, of course, the prophets. Must one add that to be asleep involves the closing of the eyes, which cannot here be meant allegorically. Still no one would venture to emend the text, were it not for the existence of so many other glosses, both in the Hebrew Bible and in the Sept. Comp. especially ix. 15.

<sup>12</sup> And should the book . . .] A further comparison, growing out of that in v. 11. Isaiah chiefly attacks the ruling class, but these only as representatives of the people. The judgment will fall with equal certainty on both the ruled and the rulers. He therefore adds a word for the former. Being equally devoid of secular and spiritual intelligence (comp. Jer. v. 4), they are like a man who can neither unseal nor read a book (see on viii. 1). Both in form and in contents the prophecies of Isaiah are quite out of their reach.—It is this verse which gives a colour of not book-learned, saying, Pray read this, he saith, I am not book-learned. <sup>13</sup> And Jehovah said, Because this people draweth near, with their mouth and with their lips honouring me, while their heart is far from me, and (because) their fear of me is (nothing but) a commandment of men which hath been taught; <sup>14</sup> therefore behold I will continue to deal wonderfully with this people, even very wonderfully, and the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their understanding ones shall hide itself. <sup>15</sup> Woe unto those who deeply hide their purpose from Jehovah, so that their work is done in a dark place, and they say, Who seeth us and who noticeth us? <sup>16</sup> O your perverseness! Should the potter be accounted as clay, that the work should say of him that made it, He made me not? and the thing formed say of him that formed it, He hath no understanding?

reason for the distribution of v. 10 among two classes of Jews. But then this verse is an appendix, and prepares the way for the sentence upon 'this people' in v. 13.

<sup>13-24</sup> A summary of a fresh discourse. The Judahites are nominally worshippers of Jehovah, but it is merely formal lip-service; consequently Jehovah will continue to deal wonderfully with them. This is a very strong expression, implying that Jehovah's dealing with his people is nothing short of inconceivable (see on ix. 6), inasmuch as it seems to run counter to his covenant-promises to Israel; the phrase is parallel to 'foreign in his work,' &c., in xxviii. 21 (see note). 'Continue,' because the invasion of Rezin and Pekah had already destroyed the illusion of Judah's security.—A commandment of men Alluding to pre-canonical collections of laws, which, we may infer from Hos. viii. 12, Jer. viii. 8, were current in some circles in the times of the pre-Exile prophets. However essential the canonical law-book was felt to be by the spiritual leaders of newborn Israel, the importance of an authoritative law-book was not by any means clear to their predecessors. Comp. on i. 11. — Taught This is verbally, but not more, inconsistent with Ps. xxxiv. 11.

<sup>16</sup> Should the potter . . . ] A favourite comparison with the Biblical writers, comp. xlv. 9, lxiv. 8 (7), Jer. xviii. 6, Sirach xxxiii. 13, Rom. ix. 20.

<sup>17</sup> Is it not . . . ] Isaiah reminds his hearers of what he had probably often told them—the future material and spiritual ἀποκατάστασις, or restitution. The connection of ideas is more clearly traceable in the parallel passage, xxxii. 14–19 (see notes). The result of God's great judgment upon Jerusalem turned into garden-land, and garden-land accounted a forest? <sup>18</sup> And in that day the deaf shall hear the words of a book, and out of gloom and darkness the eyes of the blind shall see, <sup>19</sup> and the humble shall obtain fresh joy in Jehovah, and the poor among men shall exult in the Holy One of Israel. <sup>20</sup> For the terrible one will have come to naught, and the scorner be gone, and all that watched for iniquity be cut off, <sup>21</sup> that make people sinners 'by words,' and lay snares for him that reproveth in the gate, and deprive the righteous by a mere nothing. <sup>22</sup> Therefore thus saith Jehovah concerning the house of Jacob [<sup>23</sup> he that delivered Abraham <sup>24</sup>]: Jacob shall not henceforth be ashamed, neither shall his face henceforth turn pale; <sup>25</sup> for when he seeth [<sup>26</sup> namely, his will be a temporary withdrawal of His life-giving Spirit from both land and people. But in a very little time (to the eye of faith) there will be a fresh outpouring of the Spirit; oppression will be at an end; desolation more than remedied; and the moral character of Israel regenerated. Most commentators prefer to take v. 17 figuratively. But a comparison of the parallel passage favours a combined literal and symbolical interpretation. Isaiah's symbols are very seldom mere symbols (and then he takes care to tell us so), and one of his most characteristic ideas is a future transformation of nature corresponding to that of man.—Lebanon] is merely a poetical synonym for 'forest'; comp. x. 34. It corresponds to 'pasture-land' in xxxii. 15, both being opposed to cultivated plantations; comp. x. 18.

<sup>18</sup> Here there can be no doubt that the description is symbolic; see xxix. 10. The ignorant masses shall understand 'the words of a book' (he means, of a written prophecy, see on vv. 10, 11), and the self-blinded (v. 9) shall acquire spiritual perceptions. Thus the sentence in vi. 10 shall be reversed.

<sup>21</sup> That make people sinners by words . . .] i.e., that effect their condemnation by false testimony. (Compare Hos. xi. 4, 'they have spoken words, swearing falsely'). Thus we obtain a close parallelism with the last clause in the verse.—Lay snares for . . .] i.e., seek to compass the ruin of.—him that reproveth in the gate] In the chief place of concourse, where, too, the judges sat. So Amos, 'They hate him that reproveth in the gate' (v. 10).—Deprive] Lit. turn aside, viz. from the favourable verdict due to him. Same idiom, Am. v. 12, Mal. iii. 5. More fully, Ex. xxiii. 6, 'Thou shalt not turn aside the right of the weak.'—A mere nothing] i.e., by a baseless accusation.

<sup>22-24</sup> Conclusion. Israel will in future be spared the shame of oppression and captivity, for he will have learned the lesson of the sole divinity of Jehovah his God.—He that delivered Abraham] If these words are genuine, they refer to the migration of Abraham from Mesopotamia as caused partly by the 'vexing of his righteous soul' by his idolatrous kinsmen (comp. Josh xxiv. 2, 3). There may however be an allusion to the fire out of which, as a Talmudic legend declares, explaining Ur Kasdim as sons<sup>b]</sup> the work of my hands in his midst, they shall count my name holy, and count holy the Holy One of Jacob, and the God of Israel shall they count dreadful; <sup>24</sup> and those that erred in spirit shall get understanding, and they that murmured shall receive instruction.

'the fire of the Chaldees,' Abraham was rescued. In this case, the words must be interpolated (Wellhausen). There is, I fear, no analogy for holding, with Dozy, that Abraham here = Israel.—Jacob] Is it Jacob the patriarch who is here represented as taking a sympathetic interest in the fortunes of his descendants? This is Ewald's opinion. But though a similar view may perhaps be traced elsewhere in the Bible (see on lxiii. 16), Jacob is more probably a collective term for the people of Israel; otherwise, how are we to account for the words 'in his midst'?—His sons] I suspect this, with Ew. (in first but not second edition) and Knob., to be an early gloss, intended to explain the plural 'they shall count holy,' and originally written in the margin. The word used (yēled, not bēn) is not found with 'Jacob' or 'Israel' elsewhere. I have not, however, ventured to excise the suspected words. For the change, which the proposed reading implies, from the collective singular to the plural, comp. xlii. 24, 25.—The work of my hands] i.e., the divine judgment (comp. v. 12).

<sup>24</sup> Erred in spirit] So Ps. xc. 10, 'erring in the heart.' Comp. on xxxii. 6.—Instruction] A word in the gnomic style (six times in Proverbs). Comp. on xxviii. 23-29.

CHAPTER XXX.

ISAIAH denounces the irreligious embassy to Egypt, which has now actually been sent. He predicts that Egypt will furnish no effective help to Judah, and that this flagrant unbelief of the Jews will be punished by the ruin of the state. But suddenly an impulse comes upon Isaiah to soften his tone, and offer consolation. True, affairs are getting worse and worse, but at the last extremity Jehovah will interpose for his waiting people. A splendid description is then given of the Messianic glories, followed by a definite prediction of the catastrophe in store for Assyria. (See Analysis, I. C. A., p. 69.)

Hos. viii 4.—Weaving a web] i.e., the proposed treaty with Egypt. See Del. on rendering.

<sup>4, 5</sup> The predominant or regulative tense (speaking occidentally) is the perfect. Isaiah in spirit sees the ambassadors arrived in Egypt, and meeting with a disgraceful disappointment.—Zoan . . . Hanes] Zoan (see on xix. 11) and Hanes (from the Egyptian Chenensu) or Heracleopolis magna, had given dynasties to Egypt, and were now the capitals of petty kingdoms (see Intro. to chap. xix.). Like Zoan, it is still untouched by exploration.

—People who cannot profit them] So the Rab-shakeh (xxxvi. 6), and so Sargon, 'The people and their evil chiefs, To fight against me unto Pharaoh, The King of Egypt, a monarch who could not save them, Their presents carried and besought his alliance,' (Smith, Assyrian Canon, p. 130). Comp. Intro. to chap. xxxi.

<sup>6</sup> Utterance of the beasts of the south] An early reader appears to have written this in the margin, as a kind of catch-word to mark this very peculiar verse. Or, perhaps an editor inserted it, not in the margin, but in the text, supposing a new prophecy to begin with this verse. It is, however, impossible to separate vv. 6, 7 from the preceding verses, without which they are unintelligible. By the 'beasts of the south,' the interpolator meant those mentioned in v. 6. Del., however, who still maintains the Isaianic origin of the title, thinks the word rendered 'beasts' should rather be translated 'river-ox,' or 'river-horse' (hippopotamus), the Behemoth of Job xl. 15. This, he remarks, is peculiarly suitable in this connection as an emblem of the pretentious but slow-moving Egypt.—A land of trouble . . .] i.e., the desert between Palestine and Egypt. Comp. Deut. viii. 15, Jer. ii. 6.—Viper and flying dragon] King Esar-haddon, relating the hardships he underwent in a province of Arabia, says that 'of snakes and scorpions like flies (Delitzsch, "locusts") the land was full' (Fox Talbot, after Oppert, T. S. A., iv. 260). As to the 'flying dragon,' see on xiv. 29.—Their riches] i.e., their presents for the Pharaoh.

<sup>7</sup> I proclaim . . .] The objection to alt. rend. is that it does not suit the following words, which present not a new name, but an explanation of an old one. Isaiah

avails himself of the popular taste for pungently ironical humour. The riddle of 'Ariel' receives its counterpart in that of Rahab! . . . indolence] 'Rahab-hēm-shēbheth.' Rahab was a name for Egypt in Hebrew poetry (see li. 9, with note, Job xxvi. 12, Ps. lxxxvii. 4, lxxxix. 10), derived from mythology and expressing the characteristic and immense 'arrogance' of the Egyptians ('ventosa et insolens natio,' as Pliny in his Panegyric calls them). Simply in Jer. l. 31, 32 Babylon is called 'Pride' (zādōn). Isaiah's point is that the name Rahab had better be exchanged for Shēbheth, i.e., 'inaction,' so incapable have its bearers showed themselves of carrying out their promises. Obs. Rahab is used collectively, like 'Egypt' in the first verse-half. [I do not feel sure, however, that the text is correct. Comp. Olshausen's note on Job ix. 13.]

<sup>9,9</sup> Here Isaiah pauses in his discourse, warned, perhaps, by the threatening looks of the bystanders. An inner voice bids him (so I understand v. 8) first of all write a few words, such as 'Rahab—they are all inaction,' upon a tablet in the large common character to be set up 'before them' in public (precisely as in viii. 1), and then inscribe the prophecy more fully on a scroll. For the latter a special reason is added. Isaiah's contemporaries refuse to listen to any but flattering prophecies, so that unless perpetuated by writing, the recent revelation will be ineffectual.—This is probably the earliest passage of certain date in which a Biblical author distinctly asserts the perpetual validity of his writing. Of course, in order to be 'a testimony for ever,' the prophecy of Isaiah must be stripped of its temporary references, and Rahab and Israel regarded as types of permanent phases of character.—Inscribe] Lit., carve or engrave, synonymous with 'write,' as x. 1, Job xix. 23, and in late Hebrew (Zunz, Z. D. M. G. xxv. 441).—Scroll] Hebr. sefer. The Chald. form s'far is used in the Mishna of the skins of animals. (Löw, Beiträge, p. 115). Root, to scrape or smooth.

<sup>10</sup> Prophets . . . prophesy] The Hebr. has 'seers . . . see'—different words from the preceding. The Germans well 'seher' and 'schauer.'—Ye shall not prophesy] We can already detect the germs of the persecution which broke out, as may be rightly inferred, with such severity under Manasseh; comp. v. 20, Mic. ii. 6, 11, Am. ii. 12 and 2 Chr. xxiv. 20, 21 (the fate of Zechariah).—Speak unto us smooth things] Here is the secret of the opposition between the two classes of prophets (the 'true' and the 'false'), viz., that the one makes prosperity conditional on righteousness or repentance, the other does not. See Jer. xxiii. 21, 22 (quoted in J. C. A., p. 73), and cf. Ezek. xiii.

abolish out of our sight the Holy One of Israel! <sup>12</sup> Therefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel, Because ye reject this word, and trust in 'wile and policy, and rely thereon,' <sup>13</sup> therefore this guilt shall be unto you as a rent portion that falleth, bulging out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly in a moment; <sup>14</sup> and he will break it as one breaketh an earthen pitcher, shivering it unsparingly, so that not a sherd is found in its shivered pieces for taking fire from the hearth, or drawing water from a cistern. <sup>15</sup> For thus hath the Lord said, even Jehovah, the Holy One of Israel, By returning and rest should ye be saved, in quietness and in confidence should be your strength, but ye have refused; <sup>16</sup> and ye have said, No, but on horses will we fly; therefore shall ye flee; and, On the swift will we ride; therefore swift shall be those that pursue you. <sup>17</sup> One thousand at the rebuke of one, at the rebuke of five shall ye flee, till ye be left as a pine on the top of a mountain, and as a signal on a hill. <sup>18</sup> And therefore

<sup>12</sup> This word] i.e., the prophecy against the Egyptian alliance, the policy of which, in contrast with simple faith in Jehovah, is called in the parallel line wile and policy (lit. perverseness and crookedness), comp. xxix. 15. The reading 'oppression' is explained to mean the oppressive measures used for collecting the subsidy to Egypt (comp. 2 Kings xv. 20), but this is rather forced, and spoils the parallelism.

<sup>13</sup> Therefore this guilt . . .] Sin, when it is mature, develops into punishment—one of the fundamental laws of God's kingdom, according to the prophets (see on v. 18, and comp. i. 31, xxxiii. 11, 12, James i. 15). On the figure which follows, see Sir E. Strachey, Hebrew Politics, p. 285.

<sup>14</sup> Not a sherd . . .] 'It is very common to find at the spring or the pit pieces of broken jars to be used as ladles, either to drink from or to fill with; and bits of fractured jars are preserved for this purpose.' Thomson, The Land and the Book (1881), p. 37.

'Returning' here is not 'conversion' (as Henderson, comp. i. 27), but the abandonment of the distracting, distracting search for earthly aids (comp. Ps. cxvi. 7). Thus Ew. and Del. both have fragments of the meaning.

<sup>18</sup> Therefore] Because of the extremity of your need. So x. 23, 24; 'The Lord shall make a consumption. . . . Therefore . . . be not afraid of Assyria.'—The rendering and meaning of this passage are much disputed (see crit. note); the two verbs of the received text seem to me entirely inconsistent; the emendation of a 'tittle' (Matt. v. 18) restores harmony.—Here, I cannot help thinking, we have an will Jehovah long till he can be gracious unto you, and therefore will he ¶ wait in stillness ¶ till he can have compassion upon you, for Jehovah is a God of righteousness; happy are all those that long for him!

instance of the combination of discourses delivered at different times. The paragraph to which v. 18 forms the transition seems to me distinctly to imply that invaders are already in the land.—A God of righteousness] A God who faithfully carries out his covenant, showing favour to his people and wrath to his enemies.

<sup>20</sup> Though the Lord give you . . .] Judgment shall be tempered with mercy. The first compensating benefit arising out of the siege will be that the silenced prophets of hiding-places (see on v. 10), and the Divine oracles be once more constantly heard. Alt. rendering is quite possible, and is temptingly set forth by Dr. Kay; but the image of Jehovah in person as a guide and teacher has no analogy in this prophecy. In chaps. xl.-lxvi. it would be more intelligible (comp. xl. 11).

<sup>22</sup> But before a fresh shower of blessings can descend, the nation must make a decided break with the past:—they must destroy the instruments of their sin, the idols. iii. 18, and especially Ezek. xlvii. Obs. the streams flow not only in the plains, but among the sun-parched mountains and hills (so xli. 18). The meaning of the Hebr. root yabhal (= Ass. abālu) is 'to bring' (here of artificial water-courses).—Slaughter . . towers] The 'slaughter' is that of Jehovah's enemies, within Israel (xxviii. 18–21) as well as without. The 'towers' are all irreligious means of security (comp. ii. 12),—not the Assyrian warriors, an image without analogy in Isaiah.

<sup>26</sup> 'God, in whose light we see light, will make the days go brighter' ['gratior it dies,' Horace] 'in the sense of his favour and peace' (R. Williams). Comp. Job xi. 17. But Isaiah meant more than this. It is the glorification of nature to which the prophet here, as in chap. xi., refers. 'Largior hic campos æther et lumine vestit Purpureo' (Virgil, Æn. vi. 640). The arithmetical interpretation found in text (see note<sup>1</sup>) belongs to some late scribe (in Palestine, not in Egypt, see Sept.).—Buildeth up the breach . . .] Same image as in i. 5.

<sup>27–28</sup> A symbolic description of the judgment, introduced by a theophany. It is indeed not Jehovah in the absolute sense who comes with anger, and in thick uplifting of smoke ; his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue like devouring fire ; <sup>28</sup> and his breath is like an overflowing torrent, dividing even to the neck, to swing nations in the fan of nothingness, and a bridle which leadeth astray (shall be) upon the cheeks of the peoples. <sup>29</sup> From you the song shall be as in the night when a feast

but the name of Jehovah, i.e., that side of Jehovah which is manifested to the world, or, as Del. concisely puts it, 'the God of Revelation.' The form of expression was easily intelligible to Isaiah's readers, being common to the Hebrew with the Phœnician religion (see on xxvi. 8). There is no figure of speech in it ; Isaiah has a firm, though not logically defined, belief in the manifoldness of the Divine Being. The Name is obviously a 'person,' or perhaps better a 'persona.' See xviii. 7, xxvi. 8, and notes on lix. 19, lxiii. 9. Also Del.'s note on Prov. xviii. 10 In the description which follows, the two figures of a storm and of an angry man are fused together.—Indignation] Dr. Robertson Smith, 'angry foam.' But the cognate word in Arabic is used of the roaring of an irritated animal. — Devouring fire] Comp. ix. 19, x. 17, xxix. 6, xxxiii. 14, Ex. xxiv. 17, Deut. ix. 3.

<sup>28</sup> The awful appearance comes stormily along. His breath is like a torrent in autumn time, which all but covers the man who has fallen into it (comp. viii. 8) ; and his object is to swing nations (i.e., to sift them with a violent motion of the hand) in the fan of (reducing them to) nothingness (comp. xxix. 5). The good Osiris, too, in his character of judge, is said to be represented with a flail or whip. — And a bridle . . .] A fresh figure, borrowed from hunting (comp. Ezek. xix. 4, xxix. 4), with perhaps an allusion to a cruel practice of Eastern conquerors (see on xxxvii. 29). A new and terrible feature is suggested in the words, 'which leadeth astray.' The Assyrians are to be led against their will into paths which end in ruin (so Job xii. 24, 25).

<sup>29</sup> The fall of Assyria shall be greeted with dancing and with music. Sir E. Strachey appositely quotes the similar conduct of the neighbours of Athens on the destruction of the Piræus (Grote, ix. 449). In neither case can we quite sympathise ; still there are certain collateral thoughts in Isaiah's mind, to be gathered from this and the other prophecies, which give a different colour to its anticipated rejoicing. Comp. also Ps. lviii. 10, 11.—As in the night when a feast is consecrated (i.e., opened by an introductory religious ceremony ; compare Ex. xix. 22). It is not improbable that the Passover had just taken place. Isaiah had predicted (xxix. 1) that when the feasts had 'gone round,' the dreaded enemy should be brought low, so that when the next Passover had ushered in the new (religious) year, it would be time to expect the fulfilment. The appropriateness of the reference is obvious, the danger from Assyria being hardly less than that at the Exodus. There is also an allusion to the Passover in xxxi. 5 (see note). The mention of the night-celebration ('as in the night' &c.) agrees with the directions about the Passover, Ex. xii. 6, 8, 42, comp. Matt. xxvi. 30 ; and Ibn Ezra even refers to a (doubtless Agadic) story that Sennacherib's army perished on the Paschal night. On the other hand, Ewald and Wellhausen (the latter influenced by xxxii. 10) think it is the Feast of Tabernacles (or of the Ingathering) which is intended. This was essentially a joyous festival, and is consecrated, and there shall be joy of heart, like his who setteth forth to the flute to come to the mountain of Jehovah, unto the Rock of Israel. <sup>30</sup> And Jehovah shall cause the <sup>m</sup>peal of his voice to be heard, and the lighting down of his arm to be seen, in fury of anger, and the flame of devouring fire, the bursting of clouds, and a storm of rain, and hail-stones. <sup>31</sup> For at the voice of Jehovah shall Asshur be panic-stricken, when he shall strike with the rod; <sup>32</sup> and it shall come to pass that whenever the destined staff passeth over, which Jehovah letteth down upon him from above, it shall be with timbrels and with lutes; and with battles of swinging will he fight against them. <sup>33</sup> For a Topheth hath been set in order beforehand; it <sup>n</sup>also is <sup>n</sup>prepared for <sup>o</sup>Moloch; he hath at a later time there was a very elaborate night-ritual for its observance (see Haneberg's Relig. Alterthümer, 676-9). It is mentioned by Hosea (xii. 9), and is constantly referred to as 'the feast,' see 1 Kings viii. 2, 65, xii. 32, Ezek. xlv. 25 (see Hebr.), 2 Chr. vii. 8, 9, and throughout the Mishna (Zunz)<sup>1</sup>—the Passover is only so called in the New Testament (e.g. Matt. xxvi. 5). It is of course possible that Isaiah was not referring to one feast more than another; see, however, on xxix. 1 b (against Wellhausen).—Who setteth forth to the flute] This must be a day-celebration which is referred to—probably the festal processions of pilgrims from the country. Vitringa and others think of the procession of those who brought up the first-fruits, comparing the Talmudic treatise Bikkūrim, iii. 3, not, however, a perfectly reliable authority (Herzfeld, Gesch. iii. 128, 159). Obs., there is no mention of the Levitical singers here, but Jerusalem is distinctly recognized as the religious centre (comp. xxxiii. 20).—The Rock of Israel] 'Rock' was one of the synonyms for Jehovah; so xvii. 10, xlv. 8, comp. Deut. xxxii.

<sup>32</sup> The destined staff] Comp. Hab. i. 12: 'O Jehovah, thou hast appointed them (same verb) for judgment.'—The timbrels, &c. are those with which the Jews are praising God.—Battles of swinging] i.e., those in which Jehovah swings his rod and deals blows to his enemies, comp. xix. 16.

<sup>33</sup> A Topheth] Hebr., tophleh, perhaps a derivative of Topheth—a place suitable for human sacrifices, like Topheth (or rather the Topheth, as it is an appellative). See Jer. xix. 13, 'the place of the Topheth.'—Beforehand] viz., in the Divine counsels.—It also is prepared for Moloch] 'It also,' like the high places of the Topheth, is prepared for a great burning for Moloch (the heavenly 'king,' or national god).—'What greater honour could there be for the god who delights in human sacrifices, than that Sennacherib and his army should be slain and burned in his honour?' There is a precisely made it deep and broad ; the pile thereof hath fire and much wood ; the breath of Jehovah, like a torrent of brimstone, shall kindle upon it.

similar form of expression in xxxiv. 6, where the (figurative) sacrifice is destined for Jehovah. It is true, Isaiah nowhere else refers to Moloch, but we know from Jer. vii. 31, xix. 13, 2 Kings xxiii. 10, comp. Isa. lvii. 5, that sacrifices of children were offered to Moloch in the pre-Exile period, and the Chronicles specially mention the reign of Ahaz as one in which this took place. This, which I prefer, is also the view of Geiger, Krochmal, and Dr. Payne Smith. In a slightly different form it is held by Luzzatto, Del., and Kuenen, who find in the passage a witty allusion to the double meaning of Mélek. The real Topheth was for Moloch (rather Molek, a dialectic form of Mélek), the heavenly king, the metaphorical one for the king of Assyria. In this case, we must substitute 'the king' for 'Moloch.' Alt. rend., however, is quite justifiable ; see Del. on Job. ii. 10. It makes the clause simply the statement of a fresh fact concerning the Topheth.

The king will then be simply 'the great king, the king of Assyria,' who, though he has to be burned like a malefactor (Josh. vii. 25, Lev. xx. 14, xxi. 9), deserves at any rate these grandiose preparations. If this view be adopted, the prophecy will be slightly inconsistent with that in xxxi. 8, 9, where Isaiah seems to speak as if the enemy would take flight, and return to his own land (comp. xxxvii. 34). This, however, is no objection, for as Dr. Riehm remarks, 'the prophets in order to make their threatenings and promises forcible and impressive, frequently painted in detail the features of approaching judgment or mercy, without attaching particular importance to the details themselves, or wishing to make the truth of the prediction dependent upon their harmony' (Messianic Prophecy, p. 246).—Deep and broad] To take in the Assyrian king and his whole army (as xxxiii. 12).

CHAPTER XXXI.

UNABLE to prevent the negotiations with Egypt, Isaiah exhibits forcibly their disastrous consequences to both the parties concerned. He speaks as if he expected that the Egyptians would actually go out to fight against the Assyrians, but that they would suddenly be overthrown by the hand of Jehovah (v. 3). As a further explanation, the prophet adds that Jehovah himself will descend to save mount Zion from its besiegers, and appeals to his countrymen to return to their allegiance to Jehovah.

forcibly shown by Sennacherib's description of the battle of Altaku (R. P. i. 36). Every petty local king had his stud ; his noblest tribute is 'the best horses of his many, and in horsemen because they are very strong, but have not looked unto the Holy One of Israel, and have not consulted Jehovah; <sup>2</sup>(though he also is wise,) but he will bring evil to pass, and his words he will not set aside, and will arise against the house of evil-doers, and against the helpers of those that work wickedness. <sup>3</sup>Yea, the Egyptians are men and not God, and their horses flesh and not spirit; and if Jehovah stretch out his hand, he that helpeth will stumble, and he that is helped will fall, and they all will be consumed together. <sup>4</sup>For thus saith Jehovah unto me, As stables'—see Lenormant, Les premières civilisations, i. 311-3, and comp. Hom., Il. ix. 383, 4, Ex. xiv. 6, 9, 1 Kings x. 28, 29. Strange to say, however, there is no representation of Egyptian cavalry on the monuments. The weakness of Judah in cavalry is strikingly shown by xxxvi. 8. Isaiah censures the efforts to remedy this weakness as religious treason, comp. on ii. 8.

<sup>2</sup>Though he also is wise] Ironically; 'he also,' as well as the Jewish politicians (xxix. 14). As Ewald remarks, it was a novelty to call Jehovah wise, due to the influence of the Wise Men (see on xxviii. 23-29).—His words] A revealed word being self-fulfilling (see on ix. 8). The 'words' referred to here are such as xxix. 14, xxx. 13-22.—The house of evil-doers . . . those that work wickedness] i.e., the untheocratic Jews who direct the affairs of the nation.

<sup>3</sup>Men and not God] Comp. v. 8. So Hos. xi. 9, 'I am God and not man,' i.e., specifically different from man (see on x. 15).—Flesh and not spirit] i.e., dependent creatures, without any life in themselves (xl. 6, 7), and sure to disappoint (Jer. xvii. 5, 6). The idea of 'flesh' as essentially sinful is a derived one.

<sup>4</sup>As the lion . . .] No passage in the book of Isaiah, observes Del., has such a Homeric ring as this (comp. Il. xviii. 161-2, xii. 299-302). As the lion will not give up his prey, so Jehovah will not allow the Assyrians to rob him of his 'peculiar treasure,' Jerusalem. The title Jehovah Sabáoth is here peculiarly appropriate (see appendix to chap. i.); it has also governed the selection of the verb for fight.—The rendering 'fight upon' (and not 'fight against') mount Zion seems to me to be required by the terms of the figure; and to be confirmed by the title 'God's Lion' in xxix. 1. The 'growling' of the lion 'over his prey' corresponds to the thunder amidst which (comp. xxix. 6) Jehovah shall join the fray 'upon mount Zion.' If the prophet had merely meant to say that Jehovah would execute vengeance upon Jerusalem, he would not have selected a figure expressive of the determination with which the lord of a valuable possession resists all attempts to deprive him of it. In fact, supposing that the descent of Jehovah is hostile to Jerusalem, the object compared to Jehovah must surely be, not the lion who resists, but the shepherds who attack, which of course the tenor of the description renders impossible. It is a subsidiary argument in favour of my view that the next verse contains a promise. The figure of the hovering birds exactly corresponds to that of the lion growling over his prey. It is natural, then, to regard v. 6 as a further development on the same lines as v. 5. Still, I freely admit that, were Del.'s interpretation of v. 5 in itself the more probable, we could explain v. 6 on the analogy of xxix. 2, which the lion with the young lion growleth over his prey, against whom there is called a troop of shepherds,—at their cry he is not dismayed, and at their noise he is not cast down,—so shall Jehovah Sabáoth descend to fight <sup>a</sup> upon mount Zion and <sup>a</sup> upon the hill thereof. <sup>a</sup> Like birds hovering, so shall Jehovah Sabáoth shelter Jerusalem, sheltering and delivering, passing over and rescuing. <sup>b</sup> Return ye unto him, against whom they have gone deep in transgression, O children of Israel.

has a transition as abrupt as that which Del. supposes to exist in v. 6.

<sup>a</sup> Jehovah is like a lion to his foes, but like a mother-bird to his own. Strong and bold and courageous as the lion, tender and provident as the bird, but, unlike even the eagle, able under all circumstances to repel the assailant. There is a similar effective contrast of figures in Mic. v. 7, 8. For the comparison of Jehovah to a lion, see xxxviii. 13, Hos. v. 14, x. 10, Am. i. 2, Jer. xxv. 38; to a bird, Deut. xxxii. 11. Other bird-similes in I. Isaiah, x. 14, xvi. 2; in II. Isaiah, xl. 31, lix. 11, lx. 8.—Passing over] The explanation of the Passover (Pésakh) presupposed in Exodus (xii. 13) seems to be well known to Isaiah.

<sup>b</sup> Return ye . . .] Those who adhere to the ordinary sense of the imperative have to supply the connection from the statements of Isaiah elsewhere. Jerusalem will be sifted 'in that day,' and only those who 'return,' or are converted, will be saved. Therefore, return in time. It is also possible to take the imperative here as conveying a strong assurance; comp. x. 21 for the thought and xxxiii. 20 for the idiom. (The change of person is harsh, but see next verse.)

<sup>b</sup> His rock] (lit., his cliff) i.e., the king of Assyria (Luther, Del., Riehm, Naeg.), whose name and power had hitherto been 'as the shadow of a huge cliff' to his servants. The expression is singular, but not more so than xix. 13 (which see). Two points must be held firmly, 1. that 'his rock' is the subject, on account of the parallelism, which is very closely preserved in this chapter; and 2. that the 'rock' is a person.—Hitzig's explanation, 'the rock on which Asshur thought himself so firmly planted' (comp. Ps. xxx. 7), is unsuitable to the words 'through terror.' Perhaps the word for 'cliff' was selected in preference to that for 'rock' on account of the specially religious acceptation of the latter term (e.g., Deut. xxxii. 31).—The signal] The sight of the signal-pole, which formed the Jewish rallying-point (xiii. 2), shall throw the Assyrian princes into a panic.—Fire . . .

furnace] Not with reference to the altar of sacrifice (comp. xxix. 1?), for 'furnace' is never used in this connection, but symbolically of the light of Jehovah's presence on mount Zion, which is a protection to his friends, a destruction to his enemies (Del.). Comp. x. 17.

CHAPTER XXXII.

lv. 1-8 ought clearly to be separated from vv. 9-20. They correspond to the close of another great anti-Assyrian prophecy—chap. xi., and describe the happy condition of Judah when idols have been cast away (xxx. 7), and the rod of Assyrian tyranny has been removed. A more just and merciful government—nay, an absolutely perfect government—shall then be enjoyed, the result (as we must infer from xxxii. 15) of a large outpouring of the divine Spirit. 'As the consequence of this, moral distinctions shall no longer be confounded, men shall be estimated at their real value; a general prediction, which is here applied to two specific cases, vv. 5-8' (Alexander).—The prophecy is Messianic, but not in the narrower sense which has been derived from a mistranslation of v. 2. It seems as if Isaiah sometimes (comp. xxxiii. 17) cherished the hope that the hereditary wearer of the Davidic crown would prove a worthy vicegerent of the supreme King, Jehovah. All prophecy is conditional. The tone of Isaiah in another prophecy written probably in the same period (x. 5-xi.), but somewhat later, seems to me to prove that there had really been an outpouring of the divine Spirit on the ruling class of Jerusalem (comp. Introd. to chap. xxii., end). If Hezekiah had been capable of receiving the Messianic gifts in full measure, the prediction in ix. 6, 7, would have been (from the prophetic point of view) sufficiently fulfilled in him. When Isaiah wrote xxxii. 1, he may have had grounds for the charitable belief that his sovereign would really be equal to the demands providentially made upon him. All that was certain to him was the coming of a new era for Israel and for the world, and whether the leadership of Israel would then be granted to the natural heir of David, or to Another, depended on Hezekiah's responsible exercise of his free will.

justly shall they rule : <sup>2</sup> and <sup>a</sup> a great man <sup>a</sup> shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the rain-storm, as rivulets in a parched land, as the shadow of a huge cliff in a thirsty land. <sup>3</sup> And the eyes of those who see shall not be closed, and the ears of those who hear shall hearken ; <sup>4</sup> and the heart of the hasty shall perceive distinctly, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be prompt to speak plainly. <sup>5</sup> No more shall the fool be called noble, and the knave shall no more be named gentle. <sup>6</sup> For the fool speaketh folly, and his heart prepareth wickedness, practising profanity, and uttering error concerning Jehovah, to make empty the soul of the hungry, and to cause the drink of the thirsty to fail ; <sup>7</sup> and <sup>b</sup> the machinations of the knave <sup>b</sup> are evil, it is he who deviseth plots, to ruin the afflicted by lying words, even when the poor speaketh that which is right, <sup>8</sup> but the noble deviseth noble things, and he to noble things shall stand.

Vv. 9-20. A supplementary address to the women, gathered, we may suppose, at a little distance from the rest, and testifying their indifference (comp. iii. 16-24). The prophet warns them that their self-pleasing and nothing indicates that the Messiah is intended ; king and princes are placed quite on a level, in accordance with the actual state of things under the so-called Monarchy. Indeed, the character of the 'princes' is of almost more importance than that of the king—hence the stress laid in the foll. verses on the changed character of the governing classes. Contrast the rebuke in iii. 14, 15.

security will not last much longer. He then describes the impending judgment, and contrasts the true security with the false. There is a point of contact with the foregoing long prophecy in v. 15 (see note).

Comp. on xxix. 1.—The vintage is consumed] It is the perfect of prophetic certitude. If the harvest was already over when this short prophecy was delivered (this would bring the date down to July), the words will have double force.

Here is another illustration of the vagueness of the outlines of Messianic prophecy (comp. I. C. A., p. 79). In the rest of this group of prophecies (xxix. 5, xxx. 19, xxxi. 4), Isaiah apparently anticipates that Jerusalem will be delivered from the Assyrians, but here that it will be destroyed, and lie for some time in ruins. The consequence is that the Messianic blessedness which is elsewhere drawn closely together with the present, is here thrown into an indefinitely distant future. There are points of contact, however, with earlier prophecies, which show that anticipations of this gloomier kind were frequent visitors to Isaiah (v. 9, 10, vi. 11-13), and connecting as he did the political future with the moral state of his country, it was natural that the variations in his view of the latter should reflect themselves in his view of the former. Parallel for the prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem, Mic. iii. 12, comp. iv. 1.—The mound] Hebr. 'ophel, which was the name of the steep southern side of the temple-hill.—The watch-tower] i.e., perhaps the 'tower of the flock,' mentioned in Mic. iv. 8, in connection with 'the hill' (I. C. A., p. 79).—Wild asses] which haunted the desert

the city shall be deserted ; the mound and the watch-tower shall be instead of caves for ever, the joy of wild asses, the pasture of flocks, <sup>15</sup> until the spirit be poured out upon us from on high ; and the pasture country shall become a garden-land, and the garden-land shall be counted for a forest, <sup>16</sup> and justice shall inhabit the pasture-country, and righteousness shall dwell in the garden-land, <sup>17</sup> and the fruit of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and confidence for ever, <sup>18</sup> and my people shall inhabit a home of peace, and dwellings of confidence, and easeful resting-places ; <sup>19</sup> but it shall hail, when the forest cometh down, and the city shall sink in abasement. <sup>20</sup> Happy are ye who sow

(Job xxiv. 5) ; they have now disappeared from Palestine.

<sup>15</sup> Until the spirit . . . ] 'The spirit giveth life,' is the key to this passage. The saying about Lebanon's becoming a garden-land was probably a favourite one with Isaiah (see on xxix. 17). It may of course be taken either literally or symbolically, but is best explained (as remarked already) of a transformation of nature which goes hand in hand with that of man. The implication is that the life-giving Spirit had been (i.e., would be) withdrawn not only from the Jews, but from their land. Both people and country were (i.e., would be) reduced by oppression to a mere shadow of what they had been, far as even this was from what they were destined to be.

<sup>19</sup> But last of all the prophet must remind his readers that the way to this ideal state lies through bitter suffering. The 'hail' of God's judgments shall descend on the forest, and 'the city' shall be utterly abased. Expositors seem to be agreed that the 'forest' means the stately army of Assyria (comp. x. 18, 19, 33, 34), and only to differ as to the reference of 'the city,' which most critics suppose to be Jerusalem, but Lowth and Ges. take to be Nineveh, Drechsler and Naeg. the city in which the hostility of the world to Jehovah will in the latter days be centralised ; comp. xxv. 2, xxvi. 5, 6, xxvii. 10, 11. The latter view, however, in both its forms, is very improbable, because the fate of Nineveh, or of the future metropolis of antitheism, is nowhere else referred to in this group of prophecies. Still the transition from the 'forest' of Assyria to the 'city' of Jerusalem would be peculiarly abrupt, and is not to be assumed except under compulsion. It is usual, indeed, to compare (see above) certain passages in which Assyria is likened to a forest, but is there any reason why the same figure should not be applied to Judah? A very similar one is so applied, in ii. 13 (at once literal and symbolical), vi. 13, xi. 1. I therefore take the forest to be a symbol of the proud and scornful rulers of Judah, to whose imminent judgment Isaiah actually refers under the figure of hail in xxviii. 17.

<sup>20</sup> 'Happy days will those be for the tillers of the soil!' A weak conclusion, it may seem at first sight, but we must consider the sufferings caused by the all but total extinction of agriculture during the Assyrian invasion. Besides, agricultural prosperity is one of the most constant and prominent features in Messianic descriptions. Dr. Weir explains rather differently. 'Happy they who go steadily on, doing the work committed to them by God, alike in storm and in sunshine, confiding in the righteousness of God.' He compares the close of chap. xxviii., and Eccles. xi. 1, 6.—Beside all waters] For there will be irrigation everywhere (xxx. 25), and unchecked freedom in tilling the soil.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

RETRIBUTION to Assyria; Israel's extremity, Jehovah's opportunity; the hope of a glorious future—but not for unbelievers. (See detailed analysis I. C. A., p. 97.)—Date, the 25th (or 27th) year of Hezekiah, B.C. 701 (comp. top of p. 207), in which year the inscriptions place the invasion of Sennacherib. The prophecy is highly figurative in style, and often obscure. Ewald has a strong impression that it is not the work of Isaiah, but of one of Isaiah's disciples. There are, no doubt, a few peculiarities of phraseology (see Ewald's Prophets, ii. 254); but, as Ewald himself admits, there are other phrases specially characteristic of Isaiah, and the entire spirit reminds us of that prophet. Few, however, will deny that the style is less uniformly sustained than usual, and it seems to me a reasonable conjecture that Isaiah has left this prophecy imperfectly prepared for publication. Perhaps this does but make it the more interesting.

enabled to realize the certainty of what seemed so unlikely, the fall of Assyria. He speaks in the name of the 'fifty righteous' (Gen. xviii.), for whose sake God will spare a city, many of them his own disciples.

fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations are scattered; <sup>4</sup>and your spoil is gathered as when caterpillars gather; as when locusts run to and fro, he runneth upon it. <sup>5</sup>Jehovah is secure, for he dwelleth in the height; he hath filled Zion with justice and righteousness; <sup>6</sup>and the steadfastness of thy times shall be a store of salvations, (and) wisdom and knowledge: the fear of Jehovah is his treasure.

so much of thunder (Ew., Knob., Del.), as of the sound of many waters (comp. Jer. x. 13, Ezek. i. 24, Rev. xix. 6).—The peoples] As represented in the Assyrian army.—At the lifting up . . .] So Num. x. 35, Ps. lxxviii. 1.

<sup>6</sup>Thy times] i.e., the 'changes and chances' of thy life (Ps. xxxi. 15). The pronoun refers to the people of Judah.—Shall be] i.e., shall consist in.—A store of salvations] ready for every need.—His treasure] With an implied rebuke to the treasure-loving kings of Judah; or, as others think, with an allusion to the large fine demanded by Sennacherib (? see on chap. xxxvi).

<sup>7-12</sup>The prophet has now sketched the main outlines of his revelation. It remains to fill in and apply the details. He first describes the apparently hopeless condition of Judah,—the mourning in the capital and the desolation in the country-districts.—The Ariels] i.e., 'God's lions,' picked warriors each as fierce as a lion, and as invincible as his God (comp. xxix. 1).<sup>1</sup> How truly Homeric is the scene! In fact, a childlike emotional sensibility is characteristic of the heroic age everywhere. Comp. Judg. xx. 23, 1 Sam. xiii. 16 Sept.—The messengers of peace] The ambassadors sent by Hezekiah to Sennacherib; they 'weep bitterly' at the hard conditions of peace. It is uncertain whether 2 Kings xviii. 14 can be compared; see Intro. to chap. xxxvi.-xxxix.

<sup>8</sup>The returning ambassadors are the last citizens who have ventured outside the walls. Comp. the parallel in Judg. v. 6. Then three short passionate clauses about the stern Assyrian, whom neither moral obligations, nor fear of physical force, nor respect for human life, can check.—He hath broken the covenant] If (which I still doubt) 2 Kings xviii. 14 relates to this invasion, this may allude to a slightly later period, when it became clear that Sennacherib would not be satisfied with the payment of a fine.—Despised cities] Explanatory of the first clause. Comp. 'They deride every stronghold,' Hab. i. 10.

<sup>1</sup> Strange as it seems that 'God's lions' should have been a generic term for 'picked warriors,' I see no sufficient reason to doubt it. The title comes from a primitive age, when God was still generally known as El, and when the most respected qualities were those of the freebooter. Brugsch (Gesch. Ägyptens, p. 552) says that Ariel has also this meaning in Egyptian, being one of a large class of words borrowed from Semitic.

despised cities, regardeth not men. <sup>9</sup> The land mourneth, languisheth ; Lebanon is ashamed, dried up ; Sharon is become like the desert, and Bashan and Carmel shake themselves. <sup>10</sup> Now will I rise, saith Jehovah ; now will I exalt myself ; now will I lift up myself. <sup>11</sup> Ye conceive hay, ye shall bring forth stubble ; your breath is fire which shall devour you ; <sup>12</sup> and peoples shall become (as if) burned to lime, thorns cut off, which are kindled with fire.

<sup>10</sup> This is the very moment for which Jehovah has been waiting. Now will I rise, viz. from my heavenly throne, comp. xviii. 4.

<sup>11</sup> Ye conceive hay] i.e., if ye cherish plans which are as futile as dried grass, Ye shall bring forth stubble, i.e., the result shall be no more lasting than stubble. A suggestive image, supplemented in the next clause. 'In the great scarcity of wood for fuel throughout the East, the tannoor, or oven, is usually heated with stubble or chaff.'—Breath] i.e., fury, as xxv. 4 ; comp. Ps. x. 5, xii. 5. For the figure of fire, comp. i. 31, ix. 18. Similarly in xxx. 28, the breath of a furious man is compared to a torrent.

working with the reproductive imagination, writing as he remembers that he spoke during the crisis, though not, perhaps, without notes of discourses actually delivered. In this verse he places himself in the historical present, when the 'might' of Jehovah has been victoriously displayed, and calls on all nations to recognise the far-reaching importance of Jehovah's wonderful work. For it shows who is the only God worthy of the name.

<sup>14</sup> Now (returning to the past) the once unbelieving Jews begin to 'understand' the 'Tidings' of the prophet ; but it is 'purely a terror' (xxviii. 19). For it was not merely the Assyrians on whom Isaiah pronounced God's judgment, but the immoral and irreligious Israelites. Isaiah's policy of repetition (xxviii. 10) justifies itself by the result. Even unbelievers cannot forget his constant reference to the awful fire of Jehovah's wrath (comp. xxxi. 9), of which their sins have furnished the fuel (v. 11).—Oh, who can tarry . . .] Lit., sojourn, as Ps. xv. 1). 'Who can dwell safely in the neighbourhood of the avenging God ?' For only he who willingly yields himself to be God's organ can abide those flames (comp. Moses at the burning bush, Ex. iii. 2, and see on x. 17, xxx. 27). 'Perpetual burnings,' not with reference to the eternity of the punishment (comp. on lxvi. 24), but because the fire of Jehovah's self-manifesting love and wrath is, like him-horror-stricken in Zion, shuddering seizeth the profane : ' Oh, who can tarry with devouring fire ? oh, who can tarry with perpetual burnings ? ' <sup>15</sup> He who walketh in perfect righteousness, and speaketh uprightness ; he who rejecteth the gain of oppressions, who shaketh his hands not to hold bribes, who stoppeth his ear not to hear of bloodshed, and closeth his eyes not to look on evil ; <sup>16</sup> he shall inhabit heights, fortresses of rocks shall be his place of security ; his bread is continually given him, his water faileth not. <sup>17</sup> The king in his beauty shall thine eyes behold ; they shall see a land of distances. <sup>18</sup> Thy heart shall meditate on the terror : ' Where is he who registered ? where, he who weighed ? where, he who counted the towers ? ' <sup>19</sup> The barbarous people thou shalt not see—self, eternal. There is a good analogy in the perpetual fire on the altar of burnt-offering (Lev. vi. 13, Hebr. 6). That the ' fire ' is symbolical, is evident from the next verse, containing what is practically the prophet's answer to the question of the unbelievers.

<sup>16</sup> Inhabit heights] Instead of saying that the pious man can joyfully exist in the light of this fire (comp. iv. 5), he introduces a new figure of inaccessible rocky heights. The picture of the righteous man reminds us forcibly of Ps. xv., also of Ps. xxiv. 3, 4.—His bread . . .] The promise goes beyond that in xxx. 20, for it is implied that the bread and the water should not be ' in scant measure.' Both come from an inexhaustible store (comp. Jer. xv. 18). We are already in the atmosphere of the Messianic age. Still more evidently is this the case in v. 17.

<sup>17</sup> The king in his beauty] Not Jehovah (Targ., Vit., Hend.), in spite of v. 22, for the word ' beauty ' is never (except once in a doubtful passage, Zech. ix. 17) applied to God, but Hezekiah (comp. xxxii. 1), not, however, as a type of the Messiah (as Calv., &c.), for there is not a vestige of a personally Messianic reference in the rest of the chapter, but simply as the reigning king of Judah. The ' beauty ' spoken of is not that of state-robcs (Knob.), nor that of recovered health after Hezekiah's well-known illness (Hitz.), but an ideal beauty, the evidence of God's extraordinary favour (as Ps. xlv. 2).—They shall see a land of distances] i.e., perhaps, the boundaries of the kingdom of Israel shall be extended as far as the eyes can reach. A similar hope is held out in xi. 14 (Hendewerk), and in xxvi. 15 (note the verb) ; but the closest parallel is Gen. xiii. 14, 15, which has been almost overlooked. Comp. also Mic. vii. 11, ' in that day shall the bound be afar off.'

<sup>18</sup> Et hæc olim meminisse juvabit ; they shall look back on the past (' the terror ') as on a bad dream. Obs., the deep impression made by the elaborate subdivision of the Assyrian offices.—He who registered] viz. the amounts of tribute to be paid. It is the Assyrian dupsarru Hebraized into tifsar in Jer. li. 27.—Weighed] i.e., tested the weight of the gold and silver paid. Comp. Rawlinson, Anc. Mon. i. 476.—Counted the towers] i.e., made a recognition of the city to be besieged. A contemporary psalmist bids the Jews ' count the towers ' with a different object, viz., to convince themselves that the city is uninjured (Ps. xlviii. 13).

the people obscure of speech, not to be heard—of a stammering tongue, not to be understood. <sup>20</sup> Behold Zion, the city of our festal assembly! thine eyes shall see Jerusalem (like) an easeful home, a tent that removeth not, whose pegs are never drawn out, and none of whose cords become rent. <sup>21</sup> But <sup>b</sup> there Jehovah shall be for us in majesty, <sup>c</sup> (like) a place of <sup>e</sup> rivers and canals, broad on both hands, into which oared galley shall never go, neither shall majestic ship pass thereon. <sup>22</sup> For Jehovah our judge, Jehovah our governor, Jehovah our king—he will save us. <sup>23</sup> Thy ropes have beto be heard] 'to hear' = to understand (xxxvi. 11). Comp. Slav = 'speaking' (i.e., intelligible to his own people), in opposition to 'the dumb,' i.e., the Germans (Pott, Die Ungleichheit menschlicher Rassen, p. 70).

<sup>21</sup> In majesty] Jehovah's 'majesty' is no idle quality; it is protection to his friends, and destruction to his enemies. See x. 31, 1 Sam. iv. 8, Ex. xv. 6, 11.—(Like) a place . . .] i.e., Jehovah's presence shall compensate for the want of those broad streams which protected Mesopotamian and Egyptian cities (comp. Nah. iii. 8, Jer. li. 13). Strikingly parallel is 'Ps. xlv. 4 (written, possibly, by Isaiah himself after the overthrow of Sennacherib), "The streams of a river make glad the city of God," that is, not the fountain of Shiloah, but the gracious influences of the Divine presence' (J. C. A., p. 101).—Canals] Hebr. yōrim. The plural of the word used in Genesis and elsewhere for the Nile, and almost certainly connected by one of the Pentateuch writers with the Egyptian aur 'river' (especially the Nile). Since, however, it is used for the Tigris in Dan. xii. 5-7, for canals in general here, and for subterraneous passages in mines in Job xxviii. 10, it may well be a good Hebrew word; if Friedr. Del.'s reference to Ass. ya'ur, 'stream,' should be confirmed (Paradies, p. 312).—Majestic ship] (Same epithet as above of Jehovah.) In Ps. xlviii., written at the same time as Ps. xlv. (see above), we meet with the 'breaking of the ships of Tarshish' (v. 7), of course metaphorically, of the Assyrians.

<sup>22</sup> Jehovah our king] Among the Israelites, as among the other Semitic nations, the earthly king (v. 17) is but the representative of the divine. Comp. Ps. xlviii. 2. See Riehm, Messianic Prophecy, pp. 66, 67.

<sup>23</sup> Thy ropes have become loose] The Assyrian galleys were of two kinds. The smaller had no mast; the larger had one mast, to the top of which was attached a long yard, held in its place by ropes (Layard, Nineveh). Zion is addressed. In v. 20 she was represented as a tent; here as a ship, which is a more far-fetched image, but was suggested by v. 21. Assyria is like the stateliest of her galleys; Zion's ship can barely creep along, but in spite of this will gain the victory. The ordinary view which explains the passage of Assyria is excluded by the feminine pronominal suffix, which belongs to a land or city, not to a people. (The Assyrians are only referred to as a people.)—The spoil of plundering] Two synonyms to express variety.—The lame . . .] Judah the Maccabee shared the spoil with the maimed, the orphans, &c., 2 Macc. viii. 30. But here the lame themselves secure their portion.

<sup>24</sup> No inhabitant shall say, I am sick . . .] This is not to be combined with the preceding verse, as if it meant that the sick will forget their sufferings out of sympathy with the joy of the nation. It is rather a Messianic feature. Sin and its punishment are to cease together. See xxxv. 5, 6, lxx. 20, and comp. Mark ii. 10, 11, 'But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy,) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.' It is a very far-fetched reference which Hitz. and Knob. find to the Assyrian plague.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THIS prophecy is highly rhythmical, though the corruptions which disfigure some verses greatly hinder its appreciation. The subject is the Divine judgment upon the world, out of which (as in lxiii. 16) one specially important scene is singled, the judgment upon Israel's inveterate foes, the Edomites. For the bitter feelings here expressed towards the latter, comp. Ps. cxxxvii. 7, Ezek. xxv. 12, xxxv., Ob. 10-16, Mal. i. 2-5.

There are striking parallels between chaps. xxxiv., xxxv. and Zephaniah, and between chap. xxxiv. and parts of Jeremiah (Jer. xlv. 3-12, xxv., and l., li.), which are of great critical importance. On these, and on the relation between chaps. xxxiv. and xliii., see the dissertation of Caspari, Zeitschr. f. lutherische Theologie, 1843, Heft 2, a singular specimen of the uselessness of facts without a sound judgment. Surely, 'if the occurrence of parallels between Jeremiah and Isa. xl.-lxvi. is not a decisive argument in favour of the priority of the latter, it is not worth while to reopen the subject on behalf of Isa. xxxiv.' (I. C. A., p. 112.) There is far more sense in the remarks devoted to this chapter in the essay of Budde, Jahrbücher f. deutsche Theologie, 1878, Heft 4.

Inquiries into the historical fulfilment of the prophecies are, generally speaking, foreign to the purpose of a commentary. It is worth noticing, however, that the desolation which the prophet here speaks of as future is referred to by Malachi (i. 3, note the mention of the 'wolves' or 'jackals,' and comp. Isa. xliii. 22) as already past. Was Malachi referring to the desolation recently wrought by the Nabataeans, when they occupied Edom, dropping their nomad habits, and founded the kingdom of Arabia Petræa? (See the writer's comm. on Jer. xlix. 7-22.)

<sup>4</sup> As a scroll] A unique simile, reminding us of the later Stoic conception of the sky as a βιβλος θούη, of which heavenly bodies are the στροφία or characters.

<sup>5</sup> For] i.e., In fact. Or, because:—'Jehovah's sword has sated itself in heaven, therefore, it will now descend to earth.'—My sword] A symbolic phrase for the divine vengeance, for the origin of which see on xxvii. 1. Comp. especially Deut. xxxii. 41-43, which Drechsler thinks that our prophet had in his mind.—Been bathed] Lit., soaked, i.e., strictly, with blood (as in Deut. l.c. and Jer. xlv. 10), but here, by a bold metaphor, with fury. The same verb (in Kal) is used of love in Prov. vii. 18, remarks Dr. Weir. The first objects of this fury are the host of heaven (v. 4).

<sup>6</sup> The perfects are those of prophetic certitude. For the figures, comp. Zeph. i. 7, Jer. xlv. 10, Ezek. xxxix. 17-19.—Lambs . . . he-goats . . . rams] Animals 'clean' according to the Levitical law and therefore admissible for sacrifice. Compare the parallel in Jer. li. 40.—Kidney-fat] See Lev. iii. 4.

Edom; <sup>7</sup> and wild oxen shall be struck down with them, and bullocks together with oxen. And their land shall become drunken with blood, and their dust moistened with fat. <sup>8</sup> For unto Jehovah belongeth a day of vengeance, and a year of recompense for the quarrel of Zion.

<sup>9</sup> And the torrents thereof shall turn into pitch, and its dust into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become pitch that burneth night and day. <sup>10</sup> It shall remain unquenched for ever, its smoke shall go up from generation to generation,

<sup>7</sup> Wild oxen] Hebr. r'émim. An interesting word. Auth. Vers. renders 'unicorns,' which, however, is clearly wrong, for in Deut. xxxiii. 17 the r'ém (singular) is said to have horns (A. V. evades this by misrendering 'unicorns'). The characteristics of the r'ém in the Old Testament are its splendid horns; its great size and height; its untameableness; and its mountainous haunts.—These may suggest that it is the buffalo; but this cannot be, for 1. the wild buffalo inhabits swamps, 2. it can be tamed, and 3. it penetrated westward from India in comparatively recent times.—Most modern German commentators (e.g., Ew., Del., Kalisch), have thought of the oryx, or more precisely, the Antelope leucoryx, for which they claim the authority of passages in the Talmud (see Del. on Job xxxix. 9), and the analogy of the Arabic rim, which is now used in Syria for the white and yellow gazelle. The objection is that the oryx was confined to Arabia and N. E. Africa, and was very easily tamed.<sup>1</sup>—Mr. Houghton, a zoologist as well as an Assyrian scholar, has shown from the Assyrian bas-reliefs and inscriptions, that the Assyrian rimu belonged to the genus Bos, not to that of Bison, and as the locality specified for the rimu by the Assyrians<sup>2</sup> is just where it ought to be from the point of view of the Old Testament, we may accept his decision (endorsed at length, 1883, by Friedr. Delitzsch) as to the rendering of the Hebrew word as final. Auroch or wild bull then is the meaning.—We are of course bound to account for the divergent Arabic use of the term, but that is easily done. This kind of wild bull is now extinct, and the oryx, from its size and general aspect, is the natural legatee of its name.—Be struck down] Lit., go down. Comp. Jer. l. 27, li. 40, also xlviii. 15. Naeg. denies that the word has quite the same shade of meaning as there, but why? The Hebr. yārad lattabbakh surely means 'to be felled unto (so as to fall into) the slaughtering-trough.'—Wild oxen . . . bullocks . . . oxen] i.e., the chiefs of the Edomites, as opposed to the small cattle or the people (v. 6).

<sup>9, 10</sup> The figures are suggested partly by the volcanic phenomena of Idumæa, and partly by its proximity to the site of Sodom and Gomorrah (see Jer. xlix. 18); imitated in Rev. xiv. 10, 11, xix. 3.—The eternity of the desolation is four times asserted. This may fairly be adduced as a subsidiary argument for the eschatological reference of the chapter:—by itself it would be insufficient to prove it. The fall of Edom coincides with the fall of the whole antitheistic world.

The text-reading is harsh, but gives the same sense; 'the kingdom' in this case means the newly elected king.

(Levy, Z. D. M. G., ix. 461-491.) The Rabbinical stories about Lilith may be found in Buxtorf (Lex Talm., s. v.). She was said to have been Adam's first wife, who flew away from him (comp. the Greek myth of Lamia), and became a demon. Her passion was, like that of Lamia and the Strigæ, to murder young children.—Goethe's version of the story, in the Walpurgis night-scene of Faust, is therefore not strictly accurate. The Targum of Job i. 15 gives a new and enigmatical turn to the story; 'Sheba' (A. V. Sabeans) it renders by 'Lilith, Queen of Zemar-gad' (=smaragd), identifying the wise Queen of Sheba with the Queen of the demons! See Grätz's Monatsschrift, 1870, pp. 187-9.)

<sup>16</sup> Seek ye out from the book of Jehovah . . . i.e., when the time of fulfilment has come, refer to the prophecy, and see how exactly all its details have been realised. The advice and the phraseology are equally remarkable. The advice, because it reminds us so much of the Scripture-searching of the post-exile Jews, (comp. Dan. ix. 2); the phraseology, because 'the scroll of Jehovah' may plausibly be taken to imply the existence of a prophetic canon. A single prophecy might, no doubt, be called 'a scroll' (xxx. 8, Jer. li. 60), but the form of the phrase, 'scroll of Jehovah,' points to something more—either to a collection of Isaianic prophecies, in which this was included, or a collection of various prophetic writings—in fact, a prophetic canon—in which a book of Isaiah was contained. The former view is, perhaps, easier than the latter.—The Sept. has a very singular rendering of this verse, which has given Knobel a basis for reconstructing the text. That a verb has fallen out at the end of v. 15 is not improbable, but his objection to v. 16 seems ultimately to depend on his opinion as to the date of the prophecy. To me the text of v. 15 wears all the appearance of genuineness. Kuenen, a high authority, thinks otherwise; but is he not unconsciously prejudiced by his views as to the formation of the canon? See his Historisch-kritisch Onderzoek, iii. 399 (in section on the collection of the Old Test. books). The Sept. at any rate gives a very meagre first clause in v. 16.

CHAPTER XXXV.

THIS is a description, not of the joyous return of the Jewish exiles from Babylon (an inveterate error which I fear will not soon be eradicated), but of the glorious condition of Israel after the Return, which the prophet involuntarily identifies with the Messianic age. The details of the description are partly to be taken literally, partly symbolically (see on xl. 11, xli. 18, lv. 12, 13). A transformation of the natural world is to accompany that of the spiritual (see on xxxii. 15; 16). The return spoken of in the last verse is that of the Jews who remained in dispersion even after the Return from Babylonia.

This is, I think, the only explanation which does justice to the group of prophecies of which chap. xxxv. forms a part (see on xl. 11, xli. 18, lv. 12, 13).

Is this prophecy to be connected with the foregoing one? The pronoun-suffix of the verb in v. 1 is purely imaginary (see Del.'s note), and the chapter is perfectly intelligible by itself. On the other hand, xxxv. 7 evidently alludes to xxxiv. 13, and parallels to Zephaniah occur in both chapters. There is also a suitableness in the juxtaposition of the prophecies; it produces a fine contrast, though the transition is abrupt. In short, there is a connection, though not quite so close a one as some have supposed. The case is rather like that of xvii. 12-14 and xviii.

<sup>1</sup> The wilderness and the parched land shall rejoice, and the desert shall exult and burst forth like the *narcissus,<sup>2</sup> burst forth and exult, yea, exult and ring out a cry. Lebanon's

<sup>1</sup> The desert] See on xxxii. 15. Rutgers (De echtheid van het tweede gedeelte van Jesaja, p. 171) has well pointed out the inconsistency of taking the 'blind' and the 'deaf' symbolically (v. 5), and the 'parched land' and 'the desert' literally.—Like the narcissus] Like the beautiful white narcissus, so common in spring in the plain of Sharon (Conder, Pal. Fund. Statement, 1878, p. 46). In Cant. ii. 1 we find this flower coupled with the (white or dark violet) lily. Both plants indicate a natural fertility of soil and abundant moisture. The claims of the rendering 'narcissus' were exhaustively set forth by Mr. Houghton in the Dict. of the Bible. Since then Friedr. Del. has proved that the original meaning of khabhaçceleth is a certain marsh-plant, probably (as Prof. Sayce and Mr. Houghton have pointed out to me) the Cyperus syriacus, which ornaments several marshy districts in Palestine, and especially the jungly Nahr el-Aujeh in the Plain of Sharon. This plant is allied to and equally graceful with the Cy*perus papyrus*, whose tall stem and bushy crown of threadlike flowering branchlets visitors to Sicily never fail to admire. To render here 'like the papyrus' would commend itself to those who have seen this plant, and the comparison would not inappropriately precede the more glowing phraseology of v. 2. Before 'the glory of Lebanon and Sharon' can appear, the dry desert-soil must be moistened. The objections which strike me as most important are, 1. that reeds are generally emblems of instability and weakness, and 2. that the flowers of Canticles are spring-flowers, whereas the Cyperus papyrus and its allies do not flower till towards the end of autumn.

<sup>3</sup> The slack hands and tottering knees are evidently figurative (see next verse). The prophet generally, if not always, gives us a hint when we are not to interpret his descriptions literally.

<sup>5, 6</sup> Comp. xxxiii. 23, 24, and the symbolical language of xxxii. 3, 4. It is singular that the removal of human infirmities should occupy so small a portion of the Messianic descriptions in comparison with the 'restitution' of external nature. It could not, of course, be omitted altogether.—For waters . . . ] Comp. xliii. 20, Ps. cvii. 35.

<sup>7</sup> The mirage . . . ] The phantom-lake which so often deludes the caravans shall give place to the reality,—a noble image (comp. lv. 2)! The sarab or mirage is only once again referred to (xlix. 10). In Arabic literature, naturally enough, it appears frequently; comp. Korán, xxiv. 39.—In the settlement of the jackals] The driest places shall be covered with vegetation.

<sup>8</sup> A raised way] How it is to be produced, we need not ask:—the whole atmosphere of the prophecy is supernatural. See xlix. 11, and note on xl. 3. The purpose of the highway is more liable to dispute. Most think it is for the returning exiles. Rather it is a road for pilgrims to the house of Jehovah (comp. xix. 23). Hence as Naeg. well observes, the emphasis laid on the sacred character of the persons or objects passing over it.—That which is unclean is surely not to be limited (Knob.) to the heathen. Not all Jews are admitted to the Messianic blessings, and not all heathen are excluded from them, is the doctrine of this group of released shall walk there,<sup>10</sup> and the freed ones of Jehovah shall return. And they shall come to Zion with a ringing sound, and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; they shall overtake gladness and joy, trouble and sighing shall flee away.

prophecies. Comp. xlv. 5, lxvi. 3. Still there is probably an allusion to the forced entrances of heathen invaders of Judah, as in Joel iii. 17. After this comes a clause of which I cannot give a satisfactory explanation. Neither Ew. nor Del. can make the words 'for them' seem natural. Dr. Weir's correction is easy, but the errors of the text probably go further. There is a family likeness in corrupt passages.

—The released shall walk there] Released from all trouble, and fear of trouble, the cleansed Israelites (not perhaps excluding Gentiles) shall walk unmolested to and from the house of Jehovah. Comp. on lv. 12. 'Released,' Hebr. g'alim, occurs again only li. 10, lxii. 12 (comp. lxiii. 4), Ps. cvii. 2; 'freed' (v. 10), g'dayim, only li. 11.

of Jehovah shall return . . . ] Drechsler thinks that these are not the same persons as those mentioned in the last verse. According to him, 'the released' in v. 9 are the remnant of the population of Judah which has not perished in the judgments; the 'freed' in v. 10 are those brought back from exile. He is partly right, for the 'return' spoken of in v. 10 has nothing to do with the highway of v. 8. But whether it points backward to the great Return from Babylon, or forward to the restoration of the many Jews who were still dispersed among the Gentiles (comp. Neh. v. 8), seems to me uncertain.—Joy . . . upon their head] So, 'Thou hast crowned him with glory and honour' (Ps. viii. 5). —They shall overtake . . . ] viz., that which they have so long pursued in vain.

CHAPTERS XXXVI.—XXXIX.

GENERAL HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION.

THE decipherment of the Assyrian inscriptions, which has thrown so much light on the undisputed works of the prophet Isaiah, has but revealed fresh difficulties in the mixture of prophecy and historic tradition before us. The principal of these arises from the newly-discovered fact that whereas, according to the Assyrian eponym Canon, Sennacherib only came to the throne in 705 B.C., the Old Testament (2 Kings and 'Isaiah') places his campaign against Judah as far back as 711. In this latter year, according to the Assyrian Canon, Sargon was still reigning; and though the same high authority admits an invasion of Judah by Sennacherib, it is as Sennacherib's third campaign, in the year 701, that the Canon and the royal inscriptions represent it. Hence a growing conviction on the part of Old Testament scholars that there must have been some misunderstanding on the part of the latest editor of the Hebrew traditions. 'The least change'—these are the words of Sir

Henry Rawlinson in 1858—'is to substitute in the 13th verse of 2 Kings xviii. [= Isa. xxxvi. 1] the twenty-seventh for the "fourteenth" year of Hezekiah. We may suppose the error to have arisen from a correction made by a transcriber who regarded the invasion of Sennacherib and the illness of Hezekiah (which last was certainly in his fourteenth year) as synchronous, whereas the words "in those days" were in fact used with a good deal of latitude by the sacred writers. . . . If this view be taken, the second expedition [of Sennacherib against Judah] must have followed the first within one or at most two years, for Hezekiah reigned in all only 29 years.'<sup>1</sup>

This, however, is a hypothesis of exceptional boldness, and is not only contradicted by the absolute silence of Sennacherib's inscriptions as to a second Syrian campaign, but, as Prof. Birks remarks, 'seems disproved by almost every verse of the Biblical narrative.'<sup>2</sup> It is to the sagacious genius of the lamented Irish scholar, Dr. Edward Hincks, that the solution of the chronological problem is in all likelihood due. In a learned paper on this and similar difficulties he states that it seems to him 'as if a displacement of a portion of the text had taken place, and as if the verses preceding and following the passage displaced had been thrown into one. The text, as it originally stood, was probably to this effect: "Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, the king of Assyria came up (2 Kings xviii. 13). In those days was king Hezekiah sick unto death, &c. (xx. 1-19). And Sennacherib, king of Assyria, came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them (xviii. 13-19. 37)." In the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, Sargon actually went to Palestine, as his annals of the tenth year show; but they mention no conquests made from Hezekiah. His only act of hostility seems to have been the conquest of Asdud, and he seems to have been chiefly occupied with visiting mines, among which is specified the great copper mine of Baalzephon, probably Sarabut-el-Kadim, in the Sinaitic peninsula. In the following year, Merodach Baladan was still in possession of Babylon; but being apprehensive of an attack from Sargon, he would be likely to look about for assistance. Hence his embassy to Hezekiah.

'If, then, the Hebrew text originally stood as is above supposed, it would be in perfect harmony with the contemporary records of Assyria; whereas, if the fourteenth year of Hezekiah be equalled to the third year of Sennacherib, in which that monarch places his expedition against Hezekiah, it is utterly impossible to reconcile with Scripture the capture of Samaria, which was in the sixth year of Hezekiah, and nineteen years previous to the expedition.'<sup>3</sup>

There is only one inaccuracy in this lucidly-stated hypothesis. Dr. Hincks supposes that the cuneiform inscriptions are silent as to the achievements of Sargon in Judah; but, as we have already found (see on x. 5-xii. 6), this is not the case. His principal point, however, is (so far as I can see) unassailable, viz. that the latest editor of the Hebrew traditions confounded two invasions which were really separated by an interval of ten years<sup>1</sup>—that of Sargon in 711, and that of Sennacherib in 701. The hypothesis of Dr. Hincks (which appears to have attracted very little attention at the time) has since been proposed anew by other scholars, especially Mr. Sayce and H. Brandes. The former, in January 1873, contributed to the Theological Review a 'Critical Examination of Isaiah xxxvi.-xxxix. on the Basis of recent Assyrian Discoveries,' to which I have already acknowledged my obligations for the discovery of the subjugation of the kingdom of Judah by Sargon. No Old Testament scholar will fail to admire the acuteness and ingenuity which this essay displays. The discovery which gives it its chief value (divined, but not proved, by Dr. Hincks) pours a flood of light on a whole group of Isaianic prophecies. One cannot, however, help regretting the adventurous character of a part both of the exegesis and of the literary analysis. Even Dr. Kuenen, in speaking of the latter with that reserve which characterises all his literary judgments, makes no secret of his opinion that this well-meant attempt 'does not seem to have been successful.'<sup>2</sup>

The hypothesis of H. Brandes<sup>3</sup> does not require such a great disturbance of the Hebrew text as that proposed by Mr. Sayce. The fact that in 2 Kings xviii. 14-16 the form of the name Hezekiah is not Khizkiyyahû as in v. 17 and the following narrative, but Khizkiyyah, of itself shows that these verses at any rate proceed from a different source,<sup>4</sup> and a dim consciousness of the fact seems to have led to the space in our Hebrew Bibles between v. 16 and v. 17. Internal evidence is no less strongly in favour of disintegration. Both the form and the contents of v. 17 separate it from that which precedes. After Hezekiah had sent tribute,<sup>5</sup> what could justify the Assyrian king in sending an army to Jerusalem? Again,

<sup>2</sup> Kuenen, The Prophets and Prophecy in Israel, p. 289. Dr. Kuenen continues with the remark that Mr. Sayce's essay 'has shown still more clearly than before that the [Hebrew] narrative contains data mutually conflicting, and leaves more than one question unsolved.' For my own part, I agree to some extent with Mr. Sayce, viz. that points of contact with the invasion of Sargon can be traced even after 2 Kings xviii. 17; certainly there is one in v. 34 of the same chapter. But a redistribution of the historical material into a Sargon-document and a 'primary' and a 'secondary' Sennacherib-document seems to me impossible.

<sup>4</sup> Kuenen (Onderzoek, i. 269, 270), Wellhausen (Bleek's Einführung in das A.T., ed. 4, p. 255), and Nowack ('Remarks on the 14th year of Hezekiah' in Theol. Stud. u. Krit. 1881, p. 300, &c.) fully admit this. The former thinks that the narratives relate to two different stages of the same campaign (against which see Schrader, K.A.T., ed. 2, p. 306); the latter that they give two independent reports of the same events. Floigl agrees with Nowack, but thinks that the elaborate cycle of narratives in 2 Kings xviii. 17-xx. 19 is thoroughly legendary, like the cycles relative to Elijah and Elisha (Die Chronologie der Bibel, 1880, pp. 29, 30).

if the mission of the Tartan and the Rab-shakeh had taken place in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, the latter would certainly have accused Hezekiah of complicity with Babylon (comp. chap. xxxix.), and not with Egypt. But all becomes clear if we assign the events of the section beginning at 2 Kings xviii. 17 to 702 B.C., in the spring of which year the third year of Sennacherib officially opened. Babylon had fallen in 710, and Egypt alone remained to be crushed by Assyria. The accusation brought against Hezekiah of having a secret understanding with Egypt is now perfectly intelligible.

My view, then, is briefly this, reserving an answer to objections for Essay II. in the second volume. The events related in 2 Kings xviii. 14-16 belong to an account of Sargon's invasion of Judah, and the opening words of v. 13 seem to me (following Hincks) to presuppose a fragmentary introduction of this account, which was worked up by the compiler of Kings during the Exile, together with the opening words of the more elaborate account of Sennacherib's. Such a 'working-up' is in agreement with what we know of the procedure of the writer of Kings elsewhere:—he is not an original writer, but a compiler, and not always what we should call a critical compiler. He knew even less of Sargon than the compiler of Ezra iv. (see v. 10, 'Asnapper') knew of Assurbanipal, and had not the critical caution to put aside a fragmentary document which he did not understand.

Before passing on to Dr. Hincks's second point, an answer seems due to the objection that to put Sennacherib's invasion in the twenty-seventh (twenty-fourth?) year of Hezekiah makes the persecution of the prophets under Manasseh extremely difficult to realise. Would not so great an interposition of Jehovah, so striking a fulfilment of Isaiah's assurances in His name, give an impulse to the worship of the true God with which the polytheistic party would find it hopeless to contend? And does it not seem to destroy the distinctive character of the event as a turning-point in Israel's history hardly second to the Exodus, if we admit that it was followed so closely by the accession of the renegade Manasseh?—The objections well deserve consideration, but do not appear to me insuperable. First I reply, that the members of the polytheistic party would be sure to ascribe the glory of the removal of the invaders to the gods they themselves worshipped, just as the Egyptians ascribed it to the Creator, Ptah. The writings of Isaiah give us no reason to suppose that he exerted any deep spiritual influence; he seems to have been one of those who 'toil all the night, but take nothing.' Contempt and ridicule were the lot of the prophets of Jehovah (xxviii. 9, 10, 22), and there were times in Isaiah's experience (so I think we may infer from xxx. 20) when they even had to 'conceal themselves' or 'withdraw into a corner.' Next, it is surely too much to say that the deliverance from Sennacherib is deprived of its religious importance by the close neighbourhood of Manasseh's persecution. The divine 'election' of Israel was not dependent on the character of its kings, and it was as important for the church-nation of Jehovah to be saved from destruction in Hezekiah's twenty-seventh year as in his fourteenth.

On the second point—the transposition of the account of Hezekiah's illness—a long argument is clearly unnecessary. The promise of fifteen years more of life to Hezekiah compels us to place his illness in the fourteenth year of his reign (comp. 2 Kings xviii. 2), which is the year of the invasion of Judah, not by Sennacherib, but by Sargon. Besides this, the embassy of Merodach Baladan to Hezekiah, related in chap. xxxix., can only be adequately accounted for on the supposition that it had a principal reference to this impending invasion. For twelve years, says the Canon of Ptolemy, in harmony with the Assyrian inscriptions, Merodach Baladan, the successful rebel against Assyria, reigned over Babylonia. The twelve years extend from 721 to 710, i.e., to the sixteenth<sup>1</sup> year of Hezekiah. During this period Merodach Baladan might at any moment expect hostilities from Assyria, and he therefore set himself to form as strong a coalition as possible of those who like himself were threatened by that ambitious power. 'Against the will of the gods,' says Sargon in his Annals, ' . . he had sent during twelve years ambassadors.'<sup>2</sup> We may reasonably place the embassy to Hezekiah in 713 or 712. At any rate, chaps. xxxviii., xxxix. ought chronologically to precede chap. xxxvi.

The Assyrian account of this great period (great to believers in the 'election' of Israel, not to the Assyrian annalists) is accessible to all in English, French, and German translations. It is extant in three (more strictly, in four) forms, only differing in their greater or less minuteness, which are found respectively in the inscriptions on the Taylor cylinder and on the Konyunjik bulls, and in the text of another cylinder (very similar to the Taylor), translated by Mr. George Smith.<sup>3</sup> Before, however, drawing the reader's attention to the peculiar features of the Assyrian account, it will be well to give a short historical summary of the events connected with the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib.

In 705, according to the Assyrian Canon, Sargon was murdered in his new and richly adorned palace of Dūr-Sarrukin (now Khorsabad), about ten miles from Nineveh. He was succeeded by a younger son, the famous Sennacherib, who, though inferior in political talent to his father, seems to have made a deeper impression on the Jewish mind. He may be taken, according to Mr. George Smith, 'as the typical Eastern monarch: all the vices of pride and arrogance, cruelty and lust of power, so conspicuous in Oriental sovereigns, were developed to excess in him . . . His military expeditions were on a grand scale, but more designed for show than real conquest. His greatest efforts sometimes bore no fruit, or only ended in disaster. He had no genius for conciliating the peoples he conquered, and his process for putting an end to revolt is shown by the ruin he inflicted on Babylon.<sup>1</sup> It was, however, a most difficult task which fell to him,—that of the pacification of the Assyrian empire, stirred to its furthest extremities by the news of the murder of Sargon. The foremost of the rebel-chiefs was the sworn foe of Assyria, Merodach Baladan, who emerged from his place of concealment, and once more assumed the Babylonian crown. It was a fruitless effort; Babylon was again captured by the Assyrians, though her champion, with characteristic good fortune, made good his escape. On his return from Babylon, Sennacherib laid his iron hand on the Aramean tribes of the middle Euphrates district. He says himself, on the Bellino cylinder, ‘208,000 men and women, 7,200 horses, wild asses, asses, 5,330 camels, 70,200 oxen, 800,600 small cattle, a large booty, I carried away to Assyria.’<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> We are not, I think, tied up to the literal acceptance of the scheme of chronology to which 2 Kings xviii. 2 belongs. This, as the leading critics agree, is a later addition to the Hebrew narratives.

Meantime, the kings and chiefs of Phœnicia and Palestine had not been idle. The people of Ekron, for instance, had deposed their king Padi, a nominee of Assyria, and sent him in chains to Jerusalem. So Sennacherib himself informs us,<sup>3</sup> and the fact is significant, as the imprisonment of a vassal of Assyria was an overt act of rebellion on the part of Hezekiah. Egypt too had been stirred by the news of the opposition encountered by Sennacherib in various quarters. It seemed a time for clearing off old scores. The active support of Shabataka, the energetic king of Ethiopia, was acquired. ‘The people, terrible ever since it arose, the strong, strong nation and all-subduing,’ is addressed in imaginative, dramatic style by the poet-prophet Isaiah, who evidently appreciates the noble qualities of the subjects of Shabataka. How the Ethiopian empire prepared to meet the foe, and how the spokesman of Jehovah courteously but decisively repels their assistance, we have already seen in commenting upon chap. xviii.

It was in the spring of 701<sup>4</sup> (‘my third campaign’) that Sennacherib, with the deliberateness of conscious strength, condescended to measure himself with the enemies on the west of his empire. Of this period we have, as the reader is aware, a contemporary Assyrian as well as a late Hebrew account, and it is a disputed question how far these two narratives fairly admit of being harmonised. The following combination of facts seems to the writer to supply at least a probable setting for Isaiah’s prophecies.—After reducing Sidon and the rest of the Phœnician cities, Sennacherib marched along the coast-road in the direction of Egypt. On his arrival at Lachish he detached a corps from his main army to bring back Judah to its allegiance, and especially to reduce the dangerously strong fortress of Jerusalem. The Tartan<sup>5</sup> or some inferior general invaded the land of Judah, captured forty-six of the fortified towns (this fact we owe to the Assyrian account<sup>1</sup>), and proceeded to summon Jerusalem to surrender (here we follow the Biblical narrative). It was probably (see pp. 109, 189) during the victorious march of the Assyrian detachment that Isaiah wrote the prophecies in chap. xvii. 12-14 and chap. xxxiii., of which the former was apparently composed a little the earlier, though the latter, from the varied nature of its contents, is the more interesting. The prophecy in xxxvii. 21-35,<sup>2</sup> self-evidently genuine, in spite of—or rather, because of—its unusually inartistic form, may be taken as a pendant to the more elaborate oracle in chap. xxxiii. The chief difference between these two prophetic ‘words’ is that chap. xxxiii. regards the invasion from a human point of view—that of the sufferers, chap. xxxvii. 21-35, from the serene height of the prophetic watch-tower, nay, of Jehovah himself.

Let us now turn to the Assyrian account. This has been so often quoted, that I may assume a general acquaintance with it on the part of the reader. There are two passages<sup>3</sup> which apparently conflict with portions of the Hebrew record; let us briefly consider these.

(1) In the inscription on the Taylor cylinder (col. ii., lines 20-23), Sennacherib, who, like his royal predecessors, often ascribes to himself the achievements of his officers, gives this account of the siege of Jerusalem :—
‘ . . Hīm (Khazakiau) like a caged bird within Ursalimmu his royal city I enclosed; towers against him I raised; the exits of the great gate of his city I blockaded.’

This is surely inconsistent with Isa. xxxvii. 33 (= 2 Kings xix. 32), where Isaiah is represented as prophesying that the king of Assyria should not ‘come before [Jerusalem] with shields, nor cast up a bank against it.’—It may be observed, however, (1) that it is not quite certain that Isaiah really delivered such a prophecy, for his great and undoubtedly genuine oracle has a well-marked conclusion at xxxvii. 29; (2) that, if these words be genuine, they afford a signal proof that, in the reproduction of Divine revelations, the prophetic writers were not secured from small errors of detail. The wonderfulness of the removal of the invaders does not in the least depend on the erection or non-erection of siege-towers. Granting that Sennacherib’s general did ‘cast up a bank against’ Jerusalem; granting that he even broke through the great gate of the city; this does not necessarily involve an inconsistency with the main point of Isaiah’s revelation, viz., that the Jews should in a wonderful manner be relieved from their invaders, at the very moment when human aid was hopeless. Sennacherib himself does not go so far as to say that he actually captured Jerusalem.

(2) The second apparent inconsistency between the Assyrian and the

<sup>3</sup> M. Lenormant sees an inconsistency in the place given to Hezekiah’s payment of tribute in the Assyrian and the Biblical accounts respectively (see Les premières civilisations, ii. 288), but on the hypothesis of H. Brandes, adopted above, the tribute referred to in 2 Kings xviii. 14 was paid to Sargon, not Sennacherib. Another inconsistency might be supposed in the reference to Tirhakah (2 Kings xix. 9); see, however, p. 110.

Biblical accounts has reference to Tirhakah, whose approach, in conjunction with the 'kings of Egypt,' and its consequences, are described briefly but with great distinctness in the Assyrian Inscriptions. The text on the Taylor cylinder (col. ii., lines 73-82) contains the following statement :—

' . . . the kings<sup>1</sup> of Egypt had gathered together the archers, the chariots, the horses of the king of Meroe<sup>2</sup>—a force without number, and they came to their help (i.e., to the help of the Ekronites, see p. 206) : the line of battle was placed before me over against Altaku.<sup>3</sup> They called upon their troops. In the service of Asshur my lord, I fought with them and wrought their overthrow. The charioteers and the sons of the king of Egypt, together with the charioteers of the king of Meroe, my hands took in the midst of the battle.'

It is at any rate a plausible conjecture that there is a reference to this in the prediction in Isa. xxxvii. 7 (comp. v. 9). If so, it would seem to follow (1) that the prophet ascribes the retreat of Sennacherib to the operations of Tirhakah rather than to a 'destroying angel,' and (2) that he did not look forward to such a complete (?) success at Jerusalem for Sennacherib, as the Taylor cylinder describes.

These two implications may appear to some to be unfavourable to the accuracy of the prophet (if at least he really uttered the words ascribed to him). But, in the first place, it may fairly be asked whether the Assyrian account is not guilty, to some extent at least, of a vainglorious exaggeration? Dr. Schrader has well pointed out<sup>4</sup> that Sennacherib omits the number of the prisoners and of the captured chariots, which is rarely neglected in the bulletin-like Assyrian inscriptions; also that in Sennacherib's later inscriptions he mentions payment of tribute by Hezekiah, but not the victory of Altaku. We may also reasonably ask why Sennacherib did not utilise the triumphant success ascribed to him, and press on to the conquest of Egypt. Dr. Schrader concludes that Sennacherib, though not actually beaten, obtained the victory with so much difficulty that he was compelled to withdraw from the struggle with Egypt; and he willingly admits that Sennacherib's departure may have been accelerated by the breaking out of a pestilence such as that described in 2 Kings xix. 35 (= Isa. xxxvii. 36), and apparently in Herod. ii. 141.<sup>5</sup>

On the one hand, then, Sennacherib (if we accept Dr. Schrader's very plausible conjecture) exaggerates the importance of his 'Pyrrhus-victory' at Altaku; on the other, he makes no reference to the calamity which befell a portion of his army before Jerusalem. This is in accordance with the well-known style of imperial bulletins. Perhaps, however, the Assyrian annalist has, in spite of himself, given a hint of the missing facts. M. Lenormant has already drawn attention<sup>1</sup> to the evident embarrassment of the Assyrian annalist after he has related the first events of the invasion of the kingdom of Judah. He transports us abruptly to Nineveh, without telling us why or how; and soon after we read of a fresh outbreak of rebellion in Babylonia, of which the indomitable Merodach Baladan is the soul.

Such are the main points in this remarkable group of chapters (xxxvi.-xxxix.) which are susceptible of illustration from Assyriology. There remain two other classes of questions which it seems unwise to discuss here, as they would lead us too far away from the exegesis of the Book of Isaiah. If, however, the student wishes to know some of the leading data, and some of the possible solutions, he may still be referred to The Book of Isaiah Chronologically Arranged (pp. 101-103). I mean, in the first place, the question as to the origin of these chapters, and as to their relation to the parallel section of the Second Book of Kings; and, in the second, as to the degree in which historical accuracy can be claimed for them. Did the range of Isaiah's historical narratives (such is one of the questions which may be asked) extend to the reign of Hezekiah, or did he confine himself to describing the 'acts of Uzziah'?<sup>2</sup> Even granting that he wrote some account of the Assyrian invasions in the reign of Hezekiah, is it probable that this account was at all more elaborate than the narratives in chaps. vii. and xx., which are merely explanatory introductions to the following prophecies? With regard to the strict historical accuracy of this part of our book, I have drawn attention in I. C. A. to at least a verbal inconsistency between Isa. xxxvii. 30-32 and v. 36 of the same chapter, to the juxtaposition of two events in xxxvii. 36 and 37, which the Assyrian inscriptions prove to have been separated by a considerable interval, and to the want of analogy in the preceding prophecies of Isaiah for such an extraordinary sign as that in xxxviii. 8, and for so circumstantial a prediction as that in xxxviii. 5. If these chapters are not by a contemporary writer, we need not be surprised should the representation of facts turn out to be imperfect.

<sup>a</sup> 2 Kings xviii. inserts (vv. 14-16), 'And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended : turn back from me : that which thou putttest upon me, I will bear. And the king of Assyria laid upon Hezekiah three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold. And Hezekiah gave up all the silver that was found in the house of Jehovah, and in the treasures of the king's house. At that time did Hezekiah cut away (the gold from) the doors of the temple of Jehovah, and (from) the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave it to the king of Assyria.'

this verse. It is Sargon's invasion which seems to be referred to (see above, p. 203).

Sennacherib] The native Assyrian form of the name is Sin-akhi-rib = 'Sin (the Moongod) gave many brothers ;' the Hebrew, San-khērib. — And took them] The Chronicler puts it differently — 'thought to conquer them' (2 Chr. xxxii. 1).

<sup>2</sup> The king of Assyria] Here and subsequently it is correct to understand Sennacherib, the confused reference to Sargon's campaign being confined to v. 1. —

Sent the Rab-shakeh] In 2 Kings xviii. 17 we find mention of 'the Tartan and the Rab-saris,' as well as 'the Rab-shakeh,' and as in Isa. xxxvii. 6, 24 the 'servants' of the king of Assyria are spoken of, it seems probable that the two former titles have fallen out of the text of this verse. All three are designations of high Assyrian officers. For the first, see on xx. 1. The second means in Hebrew chief of the eunuchs, and is probably the translation of an Assyrian court-title. The third, viz. 'the Rab-shakeh,' in its Hebrew form suggests the meaning 'chief butler' (comp. Gen. xl. 2 Hebr.) — a very singular office to be mentioned here, but the truth is that the Jews simply reproduced a native Assyrian (or rather half-Assyrian, half-Accadian)<sup>1</sup> title, viz. rab-sāqē, 'chief of the officers,' a military officer, next in rank, as it seems, to the Tartan (see Friedr. Delitzsch, Assyrische Studien, i. 131). — From Lachish] The capture of Lachish was thought important enough to be commemorated on two large bas-reliefs in Sennacherib's palace; one of these has an explanatory inscription (see T. S. B. A., 1878, plate opposite p. 85). The importance of the place doubtless arose from its commanding the direct route from Egypt to Judah. Sennacherib could here await the Egyptians (see xxxvii. 8). — By the conduit of the upper pool] The very spot where Ahaz had held his famous colloquy with Isaiah (vii. 3). Unbelief was represented then by an Israelite; now, more naturally, by an Assyrian.

the Rab-shakeh said to them, Say ye, I pray, to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What is this trust with which thou trustest? <sup>5</sup> <sup>d</sup> Thinkest thou that a mere word of the lips is counsel and strength for war <sup>d</sup>! Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou hast rebelled against me? <sup>6</sup> Behold thou trustest on this staff of a cracked reed, on Egypt; which, if a man lean on it, will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to all who trust in him. <sup>7</sup> And if thou sayest unto me, In Jehovah, our God, is our trust, is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Before this altar shall ye worship? <sup>8</sup> And now exchange pledges, I pray, with my lord, the king of Assyria. I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou art able to set for thyself riders upon them. <sup>9</sup> How then canst thou turn away

<sup>d</sup> So 2 Kings xvii. 20, according to the rendering of Seinecke and Wellhausen. The Hebr. text of Isaiah has, 'I say—only a word of the lips—counsel and strength for war,' which requires us to supply 'sayest thou, but it is' after 'I say,' and 'I have' before 'counsel.'

of the 'great king.' Sarru rabbu, 'great king,' sarru dannu, 'strong king,' sar kissâli, 'king of hosts,' are the constant descriptive titles applied to themselves by the Assyrian kings.

intelligence-department. Sennacherib had heard of the reformation of worship undertaken by Hezekiah (2 Kings xviii. 4, comp. 2 Chron. xxxi. 1). This, from his heathen point of view, was an act of gross impiety towards Jehovah; for had not Jehovah been worshipped from time immemorial at most if not all of the 'high places'? The local sanctuaries designated by the latter phrase appear from the inscriptions to have been known in Assyria and Babylonia as well as Palestine; indeed, they go back to Accadian—i.e., pre-Semitic—times (Sayce, T. S. B. A. iv. 30).

<sup>8, 9</sup> These two verses are spoken by the Rab-shakeh in his own name, though in the spirit of his master. In v. 10 he returns to the royal message, precisely as the Hebrew prophets speak, sometimes more directly, sometimes less, in the name of Jehovah. There is therefore no occasion on this ground to disintegrate the narrative with Mr. Sayce (Theological Review, 1873, p. 22).—We have first a disparaging comparison between the weakness of the Jews (which sug-

the face of a single prefect from among the meanest servants of my lord? This is why thou trustest in Egypt for chariots and for horsemen. <sup>10</sup> And now, is it apart from Jehovah that I have come up against this land to destroy it? Jehovah said unto me, Go up against yonder land and destroy it. <sup>11</sup> And Eliakim and Shebna and Joah said to the Rab-shakeh, Pray speak unto thy servants in Aramean, for we understand it, and do not speak to us in Jewish in the ears of the people who are upon the wall. <sup>12</sup> And the Rab-shakeh said, Is it to thy lord and to thee that my lord hath sent me to speak these gests that there is some degree of oratorical exaggeration in ii. 7) and the strength of the Assyrians in cavalry (comp. v. 28); this of course implies tacitly that a small detachment of the Assyrian army would be equal to overpowering the Jews.

—The face] i.e., the attack.—

Prefect] The Hebr. pakhath ('construct' form of pekhah) has nothing to do with the mod. Persian 'pasha,' but comes direct from the Assyrian pakhat 'provisional governor.'—

This is why . . .] i.e., because Judah itself is so deficient in cavalry.

<sup>10</sup> Sennacherib professes to have received an oracle from Jehovah, who is irritated at the overthrow of his high places. One cannot help conjecturing that here, as in v. 15, the writer has given an Israelitish colouring to the ideas of the Assyrian (like Isaiah x. 10), in spite of the inconsistent statement in v. 20. Still it is only the word Jehovah which is out of place. 'Go, take Nebo (in war) against Israel,' says the god Chemosh to king Mesha on the Moabite Inscription; a prophet or a dream-voice (see R.P., ix. 52) may have seemed to give a similar bidding to Sennacherib.

<sup>11</sup> Well did Nahum prophesy (ii. 13), 'The voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.' The Rab-shakeh's speech was so well calculated to impress the multitude that Eliakim and his companions beg him to employ the Aramaic instead of the 'Jewish' tongue.

The statement implies that Assyrian as well as Jewish officials were acquainted with Aramaic, as being the great commercial language of Syria, Palestine, and West Asia. Nor are we confined to mere inference. Private contract-tablets in Aramaic and Assyrian have been found in the remains of ancient Nineveh. But the Rab-shakeh had a still wider range of linguistic knowledge. He belonged to a nation which had a genuine interest in the study of languages, and his official duties doubtless prompted him to extend his knowledge to the utmost. No wonder, then, if he could speak Hebrew. There is much difficulty, however, in the application of the term Jewish. In xix. 18 Isaiah speaks of Hebrew as 'the tongue of Canaan,' which shows (in harmony with the inscription on the Moabite Stone) that the language of Judah cannot have differed materially from that of the rest of Palestine (Phœnicia of course being excluded). 'Jewish,' therefore, means Hebrew, and not merely the dialect of the tribe of Judah (as Naeg.). But the only other example (except in the parallel passages in Kings and Chronicles) of this use of the word is in a passage of post-Exile date (Neh. xiii. 24). It is only reasonable to infer that this account of the proceedings of the Rab-shakeh has been, at any rate, considerably modified by a post-Exile writer.

words? is it not to the men who sit upon the wall, to eat their dung and to drink their urine with you? <sup>13</sup> And the Rab-shakeh stood forth, and cried with a loud voice in Jewish, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria. <sup>14</sup> Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you, for he will not be able to deliver you. <sup>15</sup> And let not Hezekiah make you trust in Jehovah, saying, Jehovah will surely deliver us; this city shall not be surrendered into the hand of the king of Assyria. <sup>16</sup> Hearken not to Hezekiah; for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make a treaty with me, and come out to me, and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the water of his cistern; <sup>17</sup> until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and grapes, a land of breadcorn and orchards.* <sup>18</sup> <sup>f</sup> Beware lest Hezekiah entice you,<sup>f</sup> saying, Jehovah will deliver us. Have the gods of the nations delivered, every one his land, from the hand of the king of Assyria? <sup>19</sup> Where are the gods of Hamath and Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim<sup>g</sup>? and how much less have [its gods] delivered Samaria out of my hand!

* 2 Kings xviii. 32 adds, A land of generous olive-trees and of honey, that ye may live, and not die; and hearken not to Hezekiah.

<sup>13</sup> Eliakim has given the Rab-shakeh an advantage of which the clever courtier at once avails himself. He now comes forward in the character of a friend of the deluded Jewish people.

<sup>15</sup> And let not Hezekiah . . .] Here, as in v. 10, a Jewish colouring is distinctly visible. An Assyrian, as Mr. Sayce has remarked (Theological Review, 1873, p. 23), 'would hardly have been able to reproduce so exactly the encouragement held out by Isaiah' (xxxvii. 35).

<sup>16</sup> Make a treaty] Lit., 'a blessing,' treaties being accompanied with mutual benedictions. The phrase is unique, but is analogous to the use of 'blessing' in the sense of 'a present' (frequently).—Come out] i.e., surrender, as 1 Sam. xi. 3, Jer. xxxviii. 17.—Eat ye . . .] i.e., in that case ye shall enjoy your land undisturbed, until Sennacherib has brought his campaign against Egypt to a close; then, no doubt, ye will be removed from your home, but a new home will be given you equal to the old.

<sup>18</sup> Beware lest Hezekiah . . .] The Assyrian is inconsistent. In his first speech he had stated himself to be the obedient instrument of Jehovah (v. 10); here, in accordance with x. 10, 11, he represents the wars of the Assyrians as inspired by a religious hostility to all the 'gods of the nations.'

<sup>19</sup> Where are the gods of Hamath . . .] The answer would have been, In Assyrian shrines: see Rawlinson, Ancient Monarchies, i. 475. Parallel passage, x. 9.—Sepharvaim] See on xxxvii. 13.—Have [its gods] . . .] Supply the bracketted words from the context; comp. 'the gods of the nations,' v. 18.

<sup>20</sup> Out of my hand] Either the speaker claims a royal license in dealing with facts; or the compiler confounds Sargon with Sennacherib.

<sup>21</sup> Ye shall not answer him] For the Jews had, in fact, nothing that would seem, from an Assyrian point of view, a satisfactory answer.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

<sup>1</sup> And it came to pass, when the king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and came into the house of Jehovah. <sup>2</sup> And he sent Eliakim, who was over the house, and Shebna the secretary, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, to Isaiah the prophet, son of Amoz. <sup>3</sup> And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble and punishment and contumely, for the children have come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth. <sup>4</sup> Perhaps Jehovah thy God

<sup>2</sup> This distinguished embassy shows the political importance attaching to Isaiah and indeed to the prophetic office in itself. Similar applications for prophetic intervention are recorded to Huldah (2 Kings xxii. 14) and to Jeremiah (Jer. xxxvii. 3). On the other hand, Ahab evinces his hostile spirit by sending an ordinary courtier to fetch Micaiah (1 Kings xxii. 9).

<sup>3</sup> Punishment] The sense 're-buke' (Auth. Vers.) is clearly unsuitable. Judicial decision is the root-meaning; the context must determine the more precise reference. See Hos. v. 9, Ps. cxlix. 7. — Contumely] i.e., blasphemy.

This rend. suits the context (see v. 4), and is required in the other passages where the word occurs (with one vowel-point different), viz. Neh. ix. 18, 26, Ezek. xxxv. 12. — The children have come . . .] A proverbial expression rises naturally to the lips to express the utter collapse of all human resources. One hope, indeed, as the next verse shows, still remains—a hope in the Biblical sense, i.e., a sure confidence—the faithfulness of Jehovah. Comp. the similar transition, following upon the same figure, in Hos. xiii. 14.

will hear the words of the Rab-shakeh, with which the king of Assyria, his lord, hath sent him to reproach the living God, and will deal punishment for the words which Jehovah thy God hath heard, and thou wilt utter a prayer for the remnant which exists. <sup>5</sup> And the servants of the king Hezekiah came to Isaiah. <sup>6</sup> And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your lord, Thus saith Jehovah, Be not afraid because of the words which thou hast heard, with which the minions of the king of Assyria have reviled me. <sup>7</sup> Behold, I will place a spirit in him, so that he shall hear tidings, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

<sup>8</sup> And the Rab-shakeh returned and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah, for he had heard that he —Utter a prayer] The intercessory prayers of a prophet 'availed much'; see Ex. xxxii. 10, 11, Jer. xv. 1.—The remnant which exists] Forty-six fortified towns had been already taken (it appears from the Assyrian account), when the Assyrian general (according to the Hebrew account) summoned Jerusalem to surrender.

<sup>5</sup> And . . . came to Isaiah] An inartistic resumption of the narrative, such as often occurs in the narrative books, designed perhaps to comment on Isaiah's phrase 'your lord.'

<sup>7</sup> I will place a spirit in him] 'A spirit' is probably not to be understood personally (comp. 1 Sam. xviii. 10, 1 Kings xxii. 21), but in the weaker sense of impulse, inclination; comp. xix. 14, xxix. 10, Num. v. 14, Hos. iv. 12, Zech. xiii. 2. The two senses are, however, very closely connected. The Egyptians believed in the existence, in the supersensible world, of a genius, a spirit, or an εἰδωλον, even of abstract qualities or official dignities—the name for such a genius was ka (Le Page Renouf, T. S. B. A., 1878, p. 494, &c.; Hibbert Lectures, 1879, p. 147, &c.) The rendering of Auth. Vers. is against the Hebrew idiom.—Shall hear tidings] We are not told whether these 'tidings' referred to the hostile movement of Tirhakah (see v. 9), or to the pestilence mentioned (apparently) in v. 36, or, what seems a more probable reason for Sennacherib's 'return to his own land,' to some insurrection in another part of the Assyrian empire. Del. combines the two former references; Kuenen (The Prophets and Prophecy in Israel, p. 296), pronounces for the latter. The absence of any explanation confirms the view that the narrative in its present form belongs to a time when the traditional knowledge of the events was confined to the broad outlines of history.—Cause him to fall . . .] The last twenty years of Sennacherib's reign seem to have left no traces in Jewish tradition. See on v. 38.

<sup>8</sup> Warring against Libnah] No doubt this movement was dictated by the approach of the Egyptians. Libnah is generally placed near Lachish; a place of this name belonged to the tribe of Judah (Josh. xv. 42). It is bold in M. Oppert to identify this Libnah with Pelusium (comp. Herod. ii. 141).

had broken up from Lachish. <sup>9</sup> And he heard say concerning Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, He is gone forth to fight against thee. And <sup>a</sup> he again sent <sup>a</sup> messengers to Hezekiah, saying, <sup>10</sup> Thus shall ye say unto Hezekiah, king of Judah, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be surrendered into the hand of the king of Assyria. <sup>11</sup> Behold, thou thyself hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done unto all lands, destroying them utterly; and canst thou be delivered? <sup>12</sup> Did the gods of the nations which my fathers destroyed deliver them, (such as) Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the Sons of Eden who were in Telassar? <sup>13</sup> Where is the king of Hamath, and

<sup>9</sup> Tirhakah] Famous both in the Assyrian and in the Egyptian inscriptions (comp. on xviii. 2), though a long historical inscription of his own has not yet been found. The former call him Tarku, the latter Taháraqa; comp. the Hebr. accentuation Tírhákah. As-surbanipal, like the Hebrew writer, calls him 'king (sar) of Cush,' sometimes also 'king of Muçur and Cush.'—As to the accuracy of the reference to Tirhakah, see introd. to chap. xviii.

<sup>11</sup> My fathers] This must mean 'my predecessors,' for Sargon founded a new dynasty.—Gozan, &c.] All Mesopotamian towns and districts (see Schrader, K. G. F., p. 199).—Telassar] Hebraised from Tul-Asur, 'hill of Asur' (Asshur). Shalmaneser II. relates how he went out against a stronghold belonging to Akhuni the Son of Adini; put him to flight, and conquered several cities on both sides of the Euphrates. Of four<sup>1</sup> of these he says he changed the names, and the type of two of the names ('Law, Command of Asur') is exactly like Tul-Asur. It may be inferred that either Shalmaneser or Sargon gave the latter name to another of the cities of Bit-Adini. This was a petty kingdom extending some little way both east and west of the Euphrates (Schrader, l. c.). Whether it is the Beth-Eden of Am. i. 5 may be questioned; its identity with the Eden of our passage and of Ezek. xxvii. 23 seems evident.—Sons of Eden] A tribal appellation, comp. 'Son of Adini' above, and note on xxxix. 1.

<sup>13</sup> Where is the king of Hamath . . . ] (For the first two names comp. on x. 9.) The connection between vv. 12, 13, escapes those who take 'king' in the phrase 'king of Hamath' in its limited modern application, whereas 'king' here, as so often in the Semitic languages (comp. viii. 21), means tutelary god. As Clericus saw, this follows from xxxvi. 19.—Sepharvaim] The Babylonian Sippar, the city of the sun-god (see inscr. in next note), discovered by Mr. Rassam in the mounds of Abu Habba, about 16 miles S.W. of Bagdad. Anciently the Euphrates flowed past it. There, according to Berosus, the sacred (mythological) tablets were deposited, probably because Sippar was safe from the inundations of the canals. As to the termination, see on Micraim xix. 6. Others have thought of Sibraim (Ezek. xlvii. 16), which suits geographically, but is too obscure a place. In any case, the name is not connected with sepher, a book.'

<sup>b</sup> The Hebr. punctuation gives hena v'ivva, which most understand to be names of places, Hena and Ivvah, but which rather mean 'he hath made to wander, and overturned' (so apparently the Targum and Symmachus). This is obviously a wrong view of the original. Sept., 2 Kings xviii. 34, has 'Ανὰ καὶ Ἀβὰ. Avvah is also supported by the Avva of 2 Kings xvii. 24 (Hebr.).

—Hana and Avvah] Avvah is still a puzzle to me, but may we not venture to identify Hana with the Hana (near Carchemish) mentioned in an inscription found on the site of Sepharvaim, 'To Samas, king of heaven and earth, [his] king, Tugulti-Mer king of Hana, son of Ilu-Saba, for the [safety] of his land, and his (own) protection, he has given (this instrument).'Proceedings of S. B. A., 1883, p. 14.

<sup>14</sup> The letter] The word is in the plural (we might render 'the leaves'); comp. literæ.—Went up into the house of Jehovah] George Smith suggests a striking parallel from the annals of Assurbanipal's warfare against Teumman the Elamite,—Teumman's vow, Assurbanipal's tears before Istar, the oracle heard by a seer in a dream, and repeated to the king (Assyria, p. 156, Records of the Past, ix. 50-52). The contrast lies in the absence of self-commendation in Hezekiah's prayer, and in Jehovah's promise to overthrow Sennacherib without human agency. More remarkable still is the counterpart of Hezekiah's prayer and of its answer in Herodotus' version (may we say?) of the Egyptian account of Sennacherib's overthrow. 'On this the monarch (Sethos), greatly distressed, entered into the inner sanctuary, and before the image of the god (Ptah) bewailed the fate which impended over him. As he wept he fell asleep, and dreamed that the god came and stood by his side, bidding him be of good cheer, and go boldly forth to meet the Arabian (Assyrian) host, which would do him no hurt, as he himself would send those who should help him' (Herod. ii. 141 Rawl.). There is here still the same contrast with the immediateness of Jehovah's intervention according to Isaiah's prophecy. The last words, written with full conviction, lead me to ask how far the prayer of Hezekiah can be regarded as authentic. Kuenen has already remarked that no such strong statement of monotheism occurs in the works of Hezekiah's contemporaries, Isaiah and Micah, and it seems a natural supposition that the more developed faith of the later writer has here given a colouring to his language. Yet I think we may assert that Hezekiah (as one probably of the outer circle of Isaiah's adherents) felt as a monotheist, though his conscious belief was probably even less distinct than Isaiah's. With this reserve, we may admit the prayer of Hezekiah as being at any rate as accurate an expression of his sentiments as that in the Annals of Assurbanipal is of that Assyrian king's.—Spread it before Jehovah] Not 'in order that the LORD himself might read it' (Thenius)—a survival of gross anthropomorphism, which Gesenius even compares to the prayer-machines of the Buddhists. The action of 'spreading out' the letter is symbolical; hence the combination of phrases in v. 17, 'hear' and 'see,' both meaning simply 'regard.' It was the arrogance of which the letter was the symbol which Jehovah was besought to take notice of,

of Jehovah, and spread it before Jehovah. <sup>15</sup> And Hezekiah prayed to Jehovah, saying, <sup>16</sup> Jehovah Sabáoth, God of Israel, who <sup>e</sup> inhabitest the cherubim, thou art alone the (true) God for all the kingdoms of the earth ; thou hast made the heavens and the earth. <sup>17</sup> Incline, Jehovah, thine ear and hear ; open thine eyes, Jehovah, and see ; and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which he hath sent to reproach the living God. <sup>18</sup> Of a truth, Jehovah, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the <sup>d</sup> nations and their land, <sup>19</sup> and have put their gods into the fire ; for no gods were they, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone ; and have destroyed them. <sup>20</sup> And now, Jehovah our God, save us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art Jehovah, thou alone.

and it was the believing dependence on Jehovah—not the mechanical act here mentioned—which produced the desired result. The spread out letter was a 'prayer without words' (Del.).

<sup>16</sup> Who inhabitest the cherubim] There is perhaps a double reference in this phrase, 1. to the cherub of the storm-cloud (see Encycl. Brit., art. 'Cherubim'), 2. to the figures of the cherubim on the ark. For the former, comp. Ps. xviii. 10, 'And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly ;' for the latter,

Num. vii. 89, 'He heard the voice speaking unto him from off the lid upon the ark of the witness, from between the two cherubim,' see also Ex. xxv. 22.—Thou hast made . . . ] The creative power of Jehovah, as contrasted with the impotence of the idols, becomes a favourite subject of contemplation in II. Isaiah (xl. 18-26, xlii. 5-8) and in the post-Exile psalms (Ps. xcvi. 5, cxv. 3, 4, 15, cxxxv. 5, 6) ; comp. also the Chaldee insertion in Jer. x. 11 (Q. P. B.)

Vv. 21-35. A prophecy 'of striking interest, and both in form and matter stamped with the mark of Isaiah' (I. C. A., p. 101). This latter point is of importance, as the Isaianic origin of the rest of the historical section is so uncertain. Delitzsch divides the prophecy into eight almost equal stanzas ; but this seems arbitrary. We have before us—what is unfortunately so rare—a discourse nearly, if not quite, in the form in which it was delivered. All Isaiah's other works evidently owe much to reflection and to art ; here however his genius appears in its native simplicity. He seems to recognise (I am here speaking of his prophecy only as a literary work) that he has a foeman worthy of his steel, and, in contrasting the opposite religious spirits of Assyria and Israel, has done even-handed justice to each. How vividly, too, and how poetically he has represented the military prowess of his country's enemies !—how truthfully, we may now add, since the Assyrian monuments have placed us in a position to judge ! The eloquent lines devoted by M. Lenormant<sup>1</sup> to Assyrian strategy rectify the unconscious injustice of historians, and attest the accuracy of the Hebrew prophet.

<sup>21</sup> And Isaiah . . . sent] Are we to understand that Isaiah was supernaturally warned of Hezekiah's prayer (comp. Acts ix. 11), or have we simply a curtailed summary of what took place?

<sup>24</sup> Have I ascended] I, the great, the all powerful king, have performed this seemingly impossible feat. The Assyrian inscriptions present several parallels to this boastful language. Thus Shalmaneser says, 'Trackless paths and difficult mountains, which, like the point of an iron sword, stood pointed to the sky, on wheels of iron and bronze I penetrated,' lit., 'I dug up' (R. P., iii. 85); and Assurnacirpal, 'Rugged paths, difficult mountains, which for the passage of chariots and armies was (were) not suited, I passed;' 'The rugged hill-country . . . with instruments of iron I cut through' (R. P., iii. 43, 58, comp. 60). Similarly Tiglath-Pileser I. (R. P., iii. 9, 10, 16). Elsewhere, however, Shalmaneser at least is more modest: '(My) warrior-host traversed the mountain; bravely (in) its heart opposition it brought, and ascended on its feet' (R. P., iii. 97).

Clearly these boasts of Sennacherib are not to be taken literally. He was indeed no stranger to mountain-passes, but it would seem that the route of the Assyrian armies as far as Aradus (the most northern Phœnician town) was by the shore—the route of the present day.<sup>1</sup> The boasts are to be explained (with Knobel) on the analogy of the phrase 'to ride upon the high places of the land' (see on lviii. 14) = 'to conquer and rule over it.' Lebanon, as the northern bulwark of the land of Israel, is used as a representative or symbol for the whole country (comp. Zech. xi. 1). This application of the word accounts for the following futures, 'I will cut down . . . I will enter,' which mean that the conquest of Palestine had still to be completed. (There is no occasion to take the perfects as perfects of prophetic certitude = 'I will ascend,' &c.).—I will cut down . . .] This feature in the description must be taken symbolically, if the view adopted at the end of the last note be correct. Tall cedars and choice fir-trees will be 'kings, princes, nobles, all that is highest and most stately' (Birks), comp. ii. 13, x. 34, lx. 13. But, though symbolical, the description

With the multitude of my chariots have I ascended to the height of the mountains, to the recesses of Lebanon; and I will cut down its tallest cedars and its choicest pine-trees; and I will come into its farthest <sup>a</sup> height, its garden-like woodland. <sup>25</sup> I have digged and drunk <sup>b</sup> foreign waters, and will dry up with the sole of my feet all the canals of Egypt. <sup>26</sup> Hast thou not heard? long ago I made it, in ancient times is in harmony with literal fact. The felling of cedars, &c., in Lebanon and Amanus is repeatedly mentioned in the Assyrian Annals, and 'Remenen' (Lebanon) appears in Egyptian sculptures in relief, with trees felled. The two kings referred to above are fond of alluding to this subject. Thus Assurnacirpal 'caused the forests of all (his enemies) to fall' (R. P., iii. 40, 77), and Shalmaneser calls himself 'the trampler on the heads of mountains and all forests' (R. P., iii. 83, comp. p. 90). Such great builders needed the wood for their palaces, their fleets, and their machines of war. But it was also a religious act to cut down the trees; at any rate in a country where the cultus of mountains was so developed as in Syria. Just so the Persians cut down the sacred groves of the Greeks. Comp. xiv. 8, Hab. ii. 17.—Its farthest height] Jerusalem, with its two Lebanon-houses (temple and palace, comp. on xxii. 8.—Its garden-like woodland] The prophet combines two, strictly speaking, inconsistent expressions to convey an idea of the strength and beauty of Jerusalem. So of the Assyrians, x. 18. Alt. rend. does not fit in so well into the clause.

<sup>25</sup> I have digged. . . ] He implies that he has already exhausted the natural streams of Palestine, and been obliged to dig wells. 'Credimus altos | Defecisse amnes, epotaque flumina Medo | Prandente,' Juv. Sat., x. 176.—Or, if the perfect be prophetic (see note on v. 24), he may refer to the desert of the Tih (between Palestine and Egypt), where the digging of wells would be a necessity, and a hyperbole need not be supposed.—Will dry up . . .] He reserves his greatest achievement for the last. The conquest of Egypt was the true goal of the Assyrian kings. Hitherto the Egyptians had trusted, to apply the words used by Nahum (iii. 8) of Thebes, in 'her rampart the sea (i.e., the Nile), and her wall of the sea.' But the many-branched Nile should cease to be a protection; so numerous were the hosts of Assyria. A castle in the air, so far as Sennacherib himself was concerned.—The canals of Egypt] Or, of the Fortified Land (see on xix. 6).

<sup>26</sup> Hast thou not heard . . .] Sennacherib had, in fact, not heard, but is not excusable on that account, comp. Mic. v. 15, Q. P. B., and see on x. 7. We may understand v. 26 in three different ways: (1) as a specimen of prophetic irony: 'so wise and so almighty in your own esteem, are you, after all, a poor ignorant mortal?' (Birks). Or (2) we may justify Isaiah's language by the not improbable supposition that the Assyrian officials, who were acquainted with the Hebrew language (see xxxvi. 11), might if they had liked have informed themselves more accurately about the Jewish religion. Or (3) we may suppose Isaiah to be only nominally addressing Sennacherib, and really intending a word of comfort for Hezekiah. Grätz strangely takes vv. 22-28 to be an extract from a diplomatic letter (not, however, denying Isaiah's authorship).—

I fashioned it; now have I brought it to pass, that thou mightest be (able) to destroy fortified cities into desolate heaps. <sup>27</sup> And their inhabitants were <sup>1</sup>of small power,<sup>1</sup> were dismayed and ashamed; they became (as) grass of the field, and green herbage, blades of the housetops, and <sup>1</sup>a field (of corn)<sup>1</sup> before it is in stalk. But thy sitting down and thy going out and thy coming in do I know, and thy deep rage against me. <sup>28</sup> Because of thy deep rage against me, and that thy recklessness hath come up into mine ears, I will put my hook into thy nose and my bridle into thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

<sup>28</sup> But thy sitting down . . .] The connexion is, 'But I will not allow thee to go a step beyond the goal marked out by me. I scrutinize every movement of thine.'—The opening of this verse is logically unsymmetrical, probably because to insert 'and thy standing up' would have made the clause disproportionately long.

<sup>29</sup> My hook . . . my bridle] No mere symbolical expression, as the Assyrian bas-reliefs show. The 'hook' in the nose is indeed unusual, though not quite unexampled in Babylonian sculpture (comp. Ezek. xxxviii. 4, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, Q. P. B.). The 'bridle' is the thong or rope by which the more distinguished captives were led about. See Prof. Rawlinson, Ancient Monarchies, ii. 304, iii. 436.

<sup>30</sup> The sign] 'The sign' not of what precedes, but of that which follows (see on v. 32). The departure of Sennacherib would be the signal for a new and blessed life in the church-nation of Jehovah. 'The hardly-earned existence of the Jews during the next two years [rather fourteen or fifteen months] is a pledge of the brighter future in store; that is, of the Messianic period' (J. C. A., p. 105). It is necessary to lay stress upon this, otherwise it would be difficult to see in what the 'sign' consisted, or why it was necessary. The 'sign' consisted in the certitude of the prophet that the danger from Assyria was over, and the Messianic period at hand. This certitude implies a claim to supernatural knowledge. 'The sudden flight of Sennacherib to Nineveh could not, of itself, put an end to all fear of a fresh invasion, not even when the terrible extent of the judgment was known. It might seem unlikely that a single check should wholly turn back a tide of conquest and plunder which had set in for thirty years' (Birks). Isaiah ventures, in the face of this unlikelihood, to assure the Jews that there will be no repetition of an Assyrian invasion. He even goes further, and speaks as if the Messianic period were close at hand. Without a violation of psychological laws, such as we have no Old Testament analogy for assuming, it would perhaps have been impossible for him to realize the long interval between his own period and the ideal age;

of itself ; but the third year sow ye and reap, and plant vineyards and eat the fruit thereof. <sup>31</sup> And the escaped of the house of Judah who are left shall again take root downward and bear fruit upward ; <sup>32</sup> for out of Jerusalem shall go forth at any rate, it appears that, when this prophecy was delivered, he did not realize it. It is for these bold assurances, of the close of the Assyrian period, and the advent of the Messianic age, that Isaiah here offers a sign.—The after-growth] Lit., that which is added, i.e., the produce of the grains which had dropped out by chance at the last harvest. The word (saphiakh) only occurs again in this sense, Lev. xxv. 5, 11.—But the third year] It may be asked why the 'sign' should be postponed to the third year. Some (Hitz., Knob., and formerly Del.) reply: (a) Because the Assyrians would pass through Judah on their return from Egypt, and so the harvest of the second year would be lost. Others (e.g. Hofmann) (b) suppose that the first year was sabbatical, the second a jubilee year, and that on this account the cultivation of the land was to be suspended. But with regard to (a), Consul Wetzstein has pointed out that it is not necessary to assume a second Assyrian invasion. 'If, for example, the breaking up of the fallow had to be omitted in the winter of 1864-65 on account of the enemy, there could be no sowing in the autumn of 1865, nor any harvest in the summer of 1866. . . If seed were to be sown in the newly-broken fallow, there would be no harvest, and the seed would be lost' (Delitzsch, Yesaia, 1st ed., p. 655). And as to (b), the supposition is really baseless. There is no evidence that either the sabbatical year or that of Jubilee was observed before the Exile (comp. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21), and the utmost that can be maintained is a possible reference (assuming its pre-Exile composition) to the phraseology of Lev. xxv. 5, 11. 'Your condition this year will be like that in a sabbatical year, and next year like that in a Jubilee year.—N.B. The fact is, that the postponement of tillage is not so great as might be supposed. The prophecy was probably delivered in autumn (see on xxxiii. 9), somewhat before the close of the civil year. The second year would thus be from one Tisri (or October) to another, and this would be the only year completely lost to agriculture. In ordinary language, then, the prophet assures the Jews that within fourteen or fifteen months the tillage of the ground might be resumed. It is a bright fancy of Del. to connect the composition of Ps. lxxv. with the spring of the third year, when the fields which had once been laid waste by the Assyrian soldiery were once more covered with ripening corn.

a remnant, and those who escape out of mount Zion. The jealousy of Jehovah Sabáoth shall perform this. <sup>33</sup> Therefore thus saith Jehovah concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast up a bank against it. <sup>34</sup> By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and into this city he shall not come; it is the oracle of Jehovah. <sup>35</sup> And I will shield this city to deliver it, for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

<sup>36</sup> And the angel of Jehovah went out . . .] (Comp. 2 Sam. xxiv. 16, Acts xii. 23.) Commentators of all schools seem to be agreed in treating this Hebrew tradition of the destruction of the Assyrians with some freedom; nor can they be blamed, considering the long interval between the events and the Exile-period when the traditions were finally edited. Thus

Delitzsch feels justified by the conciseness of the report in supposing an epidemic of long duration in the Assyrian host, comparing the phrase of the Psalmist, 'the pestilence that walketh in darkness' (Ps. xci. 6). Prof. Rawlinson, following Thenius and apparently Ewald, transfers (and rightly—see below) the scene of the pestilence to the marshes of Pelusium, on the ground of the well-known Herodotean narrative (Herod. ii. 141). Hitzig inclines to reject the words of 2 Kings xix. 35, 'that night,' as a later addition to the original narrative; Delitzsch (ed. 1) thinks that the terms of the promise in v. 30 forbid us to interpret the words quoted in their most obvious sense,<sup>1</sup> and explains them with reference to vv. 33, 34, as = 'in the night in which the Assyrians encamped before Jerusalem.' Finally, Hitzig and Knobel refer the large number of the dead to a legendary exaggeration. The instances quoted of the large ravages effected by plagues will, however, not convince those whose difficulty is not so much in the great loss of life as in the large number of what (supposing the event to have happened before Jerusalem) can have been but a mere camp of Assyria a hundred and eighty-five thousand; and when men arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses. <sup>37</sup> And Sennacherib, king of Assyria, broke up, and went, and returned, and abode in Nineveh. <sup>38</sup> And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of <sup>1</sup> Nisroch corps of the entire Assyrian army. The Chronicler, too, simply states that 'Jehovah sent an angel, who cut off every mighty man of valour and leader and captain in the camp of the king of Assyria' (2 Chron. xxxii. 21). On the whole, although we may admit that the compiler may have believed the event to have taken place before Jerusalem, it is clearly the more probable view (as it enables us to leave the numbers untouched) that the scene of the pestilence was in the marshes of Pelusium. The legend in Herodotus presupposes a narrative much nearer to the Hebrew, for the 'mice' are simply misunderstood symbols of pestilence.<sup>1</sup> It was pardonable in the Egyptians to ascribe their deliverance to the piety of their own king. — The camp of Assyria] There was a place 'within the city' called 'the camp of the Assyrians' in the time of Josephus (de Bello Jud., v. 7. 2); but 'Assyrians' here may possibly = 'Syrians,' as in Jos., Ant. xiii. 6. 7.

<sup>37</sup> And Sennacherib . . . broke up] This again must not be taken too literally. The inscriptions show that Sennacherib lived twenty years after the Egyptian and Jewish expedition, and undertook five more campaigns. All these, however, were in the east, north, or south of the empire, and were therefore as good as non-existent for nations in the west, like the Jews. Among them were several against Babylonia — not against Merodach Baladan, who had been dethroned, but against his son, Nabu-sum-iskun, whom Sennacherib captured alive (Schrader, K. A. T., p. 329).

<sup>38</sup> Murder of Sennacherib. Unfortunately we have no Assyrian account of this; an inscription of Esarhaddon which may have referred to it is fractured in the important part. The following passage, however, is very suggestive: 'From my heart I made a vow. My liver was inflamed with rage. Immediately I wrote letters (saying) that I assumed the sovereignty of my father's house' (R. P., iii. 103, Talbot). In the next lines Esarhaddon apparently describes his contest for the empire with his brothers, and places the scene of it in the land immediately south of Armenia. — Nisroch his god] This name cannot be identified in the Assyrian pantheon, though M. Oppert formerly read Hea (the Air-god) as Nisroch,<sup>2</sup> an error which has been copied by Mr. Budge in R. P., xi. 46. Attempts have been made to explain the word Nisroch (see Del. ad loc., and Schrader, K. A. T., ed. 1, pp. 205, 206), but, it seems to me, without success. Beyond question Nisroch is a corruption, as perhaps Hana and Avvah in xxxvii. 13. Wellhausen thinks the original source had his god, that Adrammelech and Sarezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of Ararat. And Esarhaddon his son became king in his stead.

<sup>2</sup> I observe that at Prof. Schrader also in 1872 read Nisroch (Nisruk) in an inscription of Assurbanipal, where Mr. G. Smith, History of Assurbanipal, p. 4, rightly reads Hea, on the ground that the sign commonly read A is now and then used (but ideographically 1) for ru'k (rather ru'ku = 'distant') see K. A. T., ed. 1, pp. 205-208. M. Oppert, however, now reads K'in, with as little reason as Nisroch, as Mr. Sayce kindly informs me. It is much to be wished that Assyriologists would contract their Hebraizing of the proper names in the Assyrian inscriptions within as narrow limits as possible.

Asshur (comp. Sept. above); Sayce long ago thought of Nusku,<sup>1</sup> a planetary god = Nebo. The r might be instead of an original duplication, so that Nisroch would imply a form Nussüku. Wellhausen's conjecture leaves the ch unaccounted for. — Adrammelech] i.e., the Assyrian Adarmalik '(the god) Adar (is) prince.' In 2 Kings xvii. 31 this is the name of a god of Sepharvaim (see on xxxvii. 13); in this case translate 'Adar—prince.' — Sarezer] i.e., Sar(ra)-uçur (= protect the king), a shortened form of an Assyrian name, the first part of which probably consisted of the name of some god. It occurs again, as the name of a man of Bethel, Zech. vii. 2. The lacking name is most probably Nergal<sup>2</sup> (the lion-god), for Abydenus states that the successor of Sinecheribos was Nergilos, who was murdered by his brother Adramelos (Adrammelech), the latter being in his turn put to death by Axerdis (Esarhaddon). Nergalsarezer occurs as a proper name, Jer. xxxix. 3, 13. It means 'Nergal, protect (or, created) the king.' — Ararat] i.e., Armenia, in Assyrian Urvartu, which lay just beyond the limits of the Assyrian empire or influence. — Esarhaddon] The Hebraized form of Asur-akh-iddin, 'Assur gave a brother.' Notice the later mode of transcribing the name Asur in Hebrew.

As the Assyrian eponym Canon requires us to date this king's accession in 681 B.C., a presumption arises that the compiler of this chapter was not Isaiah, who in 681 would be almost 100 years old. Del. admits this with regard to vv. 37, 38, but why should he stop there?

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE dangerous illness of Hezekiah, the sign of his days being prolonged, his recovery, his thanksgiving-psalm—such are the contents of this chapter. There is a parallel narrative in 2 Kings xx. 1-11, which is evidently much nearer to the original on which both it and Isa. xxxviii. are based; together with Delitzsch I regard the latter as having been once as full of details as the former, or with most critics as the work of a hasty<sup>3</sup> copyist. In fact, Isa. xxxviii. in its present form may be considered as virtually an abridgment of 2 Kings xx. 1-11 (see notes). The date of the events described is settled by v. 6. Since, according to 2 Kings xviii. 2, Hezekiah reigned twenty-nine years, his illness must have occurred in his fourteenth year, and have synchronised, or nearly so, with the invasion of Sargon. Whether it preceded or followed the invasion, cannot, of course, be determined with certainty. The mention of fifteen years in v. 5 suggests, however (as Bähr has remarked), that Hezekiah had finished his fourteenth year and begun his fifteenth; otherwise there is an appearance of arbitrariness in the prophetic number.<sup>1</sup> In this case, the illness of the king will fall after the invasion, and v. 6 must be a late and in-harmonious insertion. That v. 6 was added by the editor is confirmed by the interruption which it causes to the context, an interruption which does not occur in the parallel, and probably original, passage, xxxvii. 35. The probability is that the latest editor, in whose time the invasion of Sargon was forgotten, made Hezekiah's illness coincide more or less exactly with the invasion of Sennacherib. On this assumption, his insertion of v. 6 becomes intelligible.

<sup>2</sup> Unto the wall] So, in a different spirit, Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. 4. Compare Lowth's note; he points out that Hezekiah's couch was probably placed in a corner, which is the place of honour in the East.

<sup>3</sup> How I have walked . . .] Contrast Hezekiah's former prayer (xxxvii. 16 &c.). This is a reason for his seeming egotism on this occasion. An early death was the penalty of ungodliness (Ps. lv. 23, Prov. x. 27), and Hezekiah knew that he had been faithful to his God. Hence he can appeal, like Abraham, to the Divine justice. — A whole heart] i.e., one not shared between rival deities, 1 Kings xi. 4. — Wept aloud] Comp. on xxxiii. 7.

<sup>4</sup> According to 2 Kings Hezekiah's death-warrant was suddenly cancelled (if we may use the phrase), before the prophet had reached the outer court of the palace. A striking instance of the conditionalness of prophecy. As Jerome says (on Ezek. xxxiii.), 'Nec statim sequitur, ut, quia propheta prædicit, veniat quod prædixit. Non enim prædixit ut veniat, sed ne veniat.'<sup>2</sup> Generally it is repentance which leads to a revocation of Jehovah's threatenings; here it is the prayer of a righteous man, who was to be taught that such prayer 'availeth much.'

heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold,<sup>b</sup> I will add to thy days fifteen years. <sup>6</sup> And I will deliver thee and this city out of the <sup>c</sup>hand of the king of Assyria, and I will shield this city.<sup>d</sup> <sup>7</sup> And this shall be the sign unto thee from Jehovah, that Jehovah will do this thing which he hath spoken: <sup>8</sup> Behold, I will turn the shadow of the steps over which <sup>e</sup>the sun hath gone down <sup>f</sup>on the step-clock of Ahaz, ten steps backward. So the sun returned ten steps on the step-clock, over which (steps) it had gone down.<sup>g</sup>

35. <sup>8</sup> The step-clock] Lit. the steps. There is no doubt that this phrase means some kind of clock, but what kind, is uncertain. Herodotus (ii. 109) states that the sun-dial was the invention of the Babylonians, and this may perhaps be intended here:—in this case, render above 'the shadow of the degrees.' But it is rather simpler to suppose the clock to have consisted really of 'steps' leading up to a pillar, the shadow of which was employed as a measure of the progress of the sun. In either case, we must suppose the clock to have been arranged, not for the twelve hours

(like the dial, an invention of the Babylonians), but rather for parts of hours, for otherwise there would not have been space for the shadow to rise or to fall ten steps or degrees equally well. Probably Isaiah is to be understood as speaking about mid-day. It is possible, too, that the motion of the shadow could be observed from the chamber in which Hezekiah was lying. This would make the choice of the sign particularly appropriate. Its ideal significance is, of course, that Jehovah would put back the life-clock of Hezekiah and of the nation, arresting the downward course, of the one towards death, and of the other towards political ruin.

vv. 7, 8. The sign of the sun's shadow. In 2 Kings this is given with a fuller introduction, and Hezekiah is represented as deliberately choosing that the sun's shadow should 'go back' on the ground that its 'going forward' would by comparison be 'easy.' 'Easy' must here mean 'easy to conceive,' for, of course, both occurrences would be equally extraordinary; but the 'going forward' of the shadow ten degrees would in fact only differ from everyday experience in its rapidity. The hypothesis that the phenomenon was due to a solar eclipse formed one of the assumptions of the chronological theories of the late Mr. Bosanquet (T. S. B. A., iii. 36). But, however plausible, it has to be rejected, as the description clearly presupposes a local phenomenon (comp. 2 Chr. xxxii. 31). Ewald suggests that the entire narrative is built upon a misunderstood poetical expression, comparing Josh. x. 13. The parallel is not complete, for in Josh. x. 12 the poetical fragment which was misunderstood is actually preserved, whereas even the word 'shadow' does not occur in the Song of Hezekiah. But another poetical passage on Hezekiah's sickness may easily have perished in the literary catastrophe of the Exile, and the Song of Hezekiah is very possibly (see below) a late composition.

vv. 9-20. The Song of Hezekiah, which is not found in the parallel narrative in 2 Kings, is a sweet and plaintive specimen of Hebrew psalmody, though from its conciseness of expression by no means free from difficulty.<sup>1</sup> Zwingli the Reformer, who had occasion in his life to apply it to his own case, hardly does it justice by the epithets 'cum primis doctum et elegans.' It is certainly deficient in originality, but it is at any rate a sympathetic reproduction of thoughts and expressions which can never become commonplace. In the melancholy tone of its contemplation of death, it reminds us partly of the Psalms (see Ps. vi. 5, xxx. 9, lxxxviii. 10-12, xciv. 17, cxv. 17), partly of the Book of Job (e.g., chap. xiv.):—the latter book, indeed, seems to have influenced, not only the tone, but even the selection of images and of phraseology in the Song. The proof of this has been given by Delitzsch, who infers from this relation of the two works that to ascribe a later date to the Book of Job than the age of Solomon is henceforth an impossibility.<sup>2</sup> As specimens of the close stylistic affinity between our Song and the Book of Job, take 'the gates of Sheól,' v. 10, comparing 'the gates of Death,' Job xxxviii. 17; the image of the body as the house of the soul, v. 12, comp. Job iv. 19, 21 (in the latter passage the soul is compared to a tent-rope); that of death as the cutting off of the thread of life, v. 12, comp. Job vi. 9, xxvii. 8 (Q. P. B.); and of God, when He afflicts man, as a lion, v. 13, comp. Job x. 16. Compare, too, the image of the weaver's shuttle in Job vii. 6. For the scattered phraseological parallels, see notes on vv. 12, 14, 15, 16.

The Song is called a Miktabh of Hezekiah (v. 9). Some would include it among the Psalms 'with artful terms inscribed' (Milton). So e.g. Gesenius, who supposes bh and m to be interchanged, so that Miktabh = Miktām. But the roots kāthabbh and kātham do not appear to be interchanged, so that it would be better to suppose bh in Miktabh to be a corruption of the m in Miktām. But even this is hardly more than plausible, since the context leads us to expect an emphatic statement of the authorship of Hezekiah. The literary character here attributed to that king is in harmony with the fact that a collection of Solomonic proverbs is ascribed to the zeal of Hezekiah (Prov. xxv. 1), as well as the revival of the liturgical use of the Psalms of David and Asaph (only indeed in 2 Chr. xxix. 30).

<sup>2</sup> Drechsler, Der Prophet Jesaia, ii. 2, pp. 220, 221 (Anhang or Appendix, by Delitzsch). We must first of all, however, settle the question of date. Besides the argument from the unoriginality of the Song in phraseology, an inference unfavourable to an early date may plausibly be drawn from the apparent allusion in v. 20 to a fact only supported by the Chronicler.

Of course, however, we must receive the statement of the heading with some degree of hesitation, knowing the inaccuracies which abound in the headings of the Psalms. The Song is so full of reminiscences, that it may perhaps, like the Psalm of Jonah, be not earlier than the Exile or even post-Exile period, when the study of the written Word weakened the impulse to original composition.

Four stanzas or strophes are pointed out by Ewald (I. vv. 10-12, II. vv. 13, 14, III. vv. 15-17, IV. vv. 18-20).<sup>1</sup> In the two first the poet recalls his despairing condition immediately before the Divine promise of recovery reached him; in the two last, he revels in the joy and gratitude called forth by the re-creating word of Jehovah's prophet. There is no reference to the 'sign' of the 'step-clock,' a remarkable omission, as to which see note on v. 16.

<sup>10</sup> I said, 'In the noontide<sup>s</sup> of my days must I depart into the gates of Sheól; I have been mulcted of the residue of my years.' <sup>11</sup> I said, 'I shall not see<sup>h</sup> Jah in the land of

<sup>10</sup> In the noontide of my days] Midway in life to Hezekiah, as to Dante, came his peril of death. 'Noontide' he expresses poetically by 'pause'; it is the time when the sun appears to stand still in the zenith. He has now outpassed by four years the middle of the period assigned by the Psalmist (Ps. xc. 10) to human life, but it is still noontide in his consciousness, when the sudden blow falls.—To some this appears a farfetched explanation, but in Josh. x. 12 we have the famous command, 'Sun, in Gibeon be still,' for 'stand still.' The alternative is to take 'in the stillness of my days'—'when my days were gliding quietly along,' with reference either to the withdrawal of the Assyrians, as Ges. (which is probably against chronology), or to the 'even tenor' of a healthy life, as Del. The meaning adopted above, besides being highly poetical and in perfect accordance with chronology, is favoured by the expression 'the residue of my days' at the end of the verse.—The gates of Sheól] The Assyrians, too, like the Hebrews, represented their Hades as an underground city or fortress. 'Seven walls encircle it, each with its gate and porter, its outer wall being a watery moat' (comp. Acheron); Boscawen, T. S. B. A., iv. 290. Comp. 'the gates of Hades,' Matt. xvi. 18, and 'the gates of Death,' Ps. ix. 13, cvii. 18, Job xxxviii. 17; and see note on v. 14, xiv. 9.

<sup>11</sup> I shall not see Jah . . .] Comp. i. 12. There 'to see Jehovah's face' was a purely imaginary seeing, identifiable with formal attendance in the sanctuary. Here it is the seeing of experience, as in that vigorous aposiopesis of the psalmist (Ps. xxvii. 13), 'If I did not believe to see the goodness of Jehovah in the land of the living !' The Sept. translator sought, characteristically, to conceal the anthropomorphism (comp. crit. note on i. 12).—In the land of the living] Implying that 'the goodness of Jehovah' is not to be 'seen' or experienced in the Underworld (comp. vv. 18, 19).

<sup>13</sup> My habitation] The word is not common in this sense (see crit. note), but the poet is also a master of language, and prefers uncommon to familiar expressions. The rend. 'age' cannot be legitimated philologically ; also it hardly accords with the verbs which follow, though we do find the idea of time materialised as it were in Ps. xxxix. 5 (6), Matt. vi. 27 (Q. P. B.)—Is plucked up] i.e., is as good as plucked up. The figure is taken from the nomadic life, comp. xxxiii. 20. Besides Job iv. 21, comp. Ps. lii. 5 (Q. P. B.), 2 Cor. v. 1, 4, 2 Pet. i. 13, 14.—Carried off] As if into exile.—Thou hast cut off] i.e. wilt certainly cut off. The pointing of the received text makes this clause inconsistent with the next, in which Jehovah is the weaver. Another Chaldaism is nothing surprising : 'rolled up,' too, is merely an inferred sense. If however we retain the text-reading, this is the best meaning to give to it. In this case,

Hezekiah says, 'I regard my life as already "rolled up" and done with, so near is the prospect of death.'

—Did he sever me] The speaker shrinks from naming God as the author of his calamity, comp. Job iii. 20 (Ew.). The same word is used in Job vi. 9, and, in a different conjugation, Job xxvii. 8.—From day to night] He expects this severe illness to run its course in a single day. Comp. Job iv. 20.

<sup>13</sup> I cried out for help] So, in accordance with usage (see Ps. xxx. 2, lxxxviii. 13), and not merely 'I cried out' (comparing Ps. xxxviii. 9, Job iii. 24, where the phrase is different), we must render shivva'tt. The sick man appeals against the fate which threatens him, appeals—to whom? To God (comp. v. 3)—to God against Himself ; to the essential mercy, against the apparent cruelty, of Jehovah. So again in v. 14. It is the characteristic irony of faith. In Dr. Mozley's words (Essays, i. 217), 'The apparent doubt only expresses more strongly the real faith ; the protest against injustice and harshness, the sense of absolute goodness and ineffable mercy.'—The rend. of Del., Naeg., &c., based upon the text-reading, requires us to suppose an unnatural ellipsis. Ps. cxxxi. 2, which is quoted in its favour, is not really favourable, for there we read, 'I have smoothed my soul,' without an end of me?' <sup>14</sup> Like a swift, (like) a crane, did I scream; I did moan like a dove; mine eyes <sup>a</sup> looked languishingly towards the height <sup>a</sup>; Jehovah, <sup>o</sup> be careful for me, <sup>o</sup> become my surety.

any ellipsis. It is, moreover, quite opposed to the context, which by no means indicates patience as a quality of the speaker. The analogy, too, of 'I said' in vv. 10, 11, suggests some similar introduction to the vehement exclamation which follows.—Until the morning] His illness did not run its course so quickly as he had expected. He is still alive the next morning, but cannot expect, as the second half of the verse declares, to outlive this second day.—As a lion] The accents connect this with the preceding words, but here, as in other instances, the necessities of rhythm have led to a violation of logical sequence. Comp. Job x. 16.

<sup>14</sup> Like a swift (like) a crane . . .] The conjunction of these two kinds of birds is remarkable, as their notes are in most respects very different, though not more different than those of the bear and the dove, which are conjoined as similes for groaning in lix. 11. The note of the swift (a bird of the swallow-tribe) is shrill, that of the crane is resonant but deep. One single verb is used zeugmatically for both; the Hebr. (šifšēf) properly signifies a shrill but penetrating sound, and is therefore more applicable to the stridulous cry of the swift than to the deep, trumpet-like blast of the crane. Both notes, however, agree in their penetrating quality, and the zeugma in 'did I scream' is not more striking than others. The swift and the crane are both mentioned again together with the turtle-dove by Jeremiah (viii. 7) with reference to their migratory habits; this suggests that the sacred poet is here alluding to the cries which the two former birds emit in setting forth on their migrations.—The word for 'did I scream' is in viii. 19, ix. 4 used of the thin feeble voice natural to ghosts and assumed by necromancers, and in x. 14 at any rate connotes feebleness of sound. On this some critics have based an objection to rendering 'šifšēf' by 'crane,' but wrongly; for the note of the swift as well as of the crane is described as loud. It must therefore be the quality and not the strength of the notes of these birds which is referred to; in fact, the penetrating quality mentioned above. (On the note of the swift, see Wood's Illustrated Natural History: Birds, p. 131; on that of the crane, see the same work, p. 671, and Encyclopædia Britannica, ninth ed., vol. vi. p. 546. The peculiar note of the crane is ascribed to the unusual formation of its trachea.)—Mine eyes looked languishingly . . .] A half-despairing look is for some time all that he is equal to.—This is not to be taken as the turning-point in the speaker's sufferings (Naeg.), as if he only now ventured to appeal to Jehovah; the three first clauses in v. 14 are co-ordinated. Hezekiah has all along fixed his hope on Jehovah (comp. on beginning of v. 13), though it only now forces for itself an utterance.—The height] Where Jehovah dwells, xxxiii. 5, lvii. 15.—Become my surety] The sick man thinks of his prototype Job, who, after very similar complaints, makes the very same petition (Job xvii. 3, comp. Ps. cxix. 122). The image is that of a debtor who is being carried to prison (Matt. xviii. 30). But what a deep thought is involved here in the application! For He who is asked to interpose as a surety is, in Hezekiah's case, at the same

It is not necessary to suppose a special reference to the processions of worshippers to the temple (as Ew., Naeg.), in spite of Ps. xlii. 5, where the same word occurs. It is the ‘walk of our life’ which is meant. The same figure, which must remind us of stately Italian pictures, recurs in xxxv. 9 b, lv. 12 a, with reference to Jehovah’s ‘freed ones.’ The root-idea of the very uncommon Hebr. word (‘eddadeh) is ‘to impel’; this is qualified by the reflexive conjugation. See Del. on Ps. xlii. 5, and comp. Notes and Criticisms, p. 18.—All my years] All my remaining years.

<sup>16</sup> By such things . . .] ‘Not by bread alone doth man live, but by everything which proceedeth out of the mouth of Jehovah’ (Deut. viii. 3, quoted by Ew.). Hezekiah now has full confidence in Jehovah’s power; ‘He speaketh and it is done.’ The sign asked for in vv. 7, 8 is forgotten; it was, in fact, a symptom of spiritual weakness (vii. 11, comp. v. 9). ‘By such things,’ i.e., such words as those of Jehovah’s prophet, which carry with them their own fulfilment (see on ix. 8), men both come into existence and are preserved alive.—This explanation suits the context, but is not free from objection, as the Hebr. of the two first clauses of the verse does not read naturally, and is probably corrupt. Ew.’s conjecture (see above) is simple and plausible, but the difficulty to me lies in the two words which he leaves untouched.—And so thou wilt . . .] The application of the general truth that God is the source of all life to the particular case of the speaker.

<sup>17</sup> For (my) welfare . . .] My welfare, my true peace (peace and welfare being equivalent ideas in Hebrew), was the end for which my trouble was sent. Comp. Job v. 17, 18.—Was it (so) bitter to me, (so) bitter] A repetition of the same word, as in vv. 11, 18. Perhaps the writer may intend to suggest a second meaning—‘mutata est mihi amaritudo’ (see note).—Hast kept] The pronunciation of the two rival readings is very nearly the same (khā-saktā—khāshaktā), but that adopted above is at once the more natural in itself, and is supported by Ps. lxxviii. 50, and still more strongly by Job xxxiii. 18. According to the text-reading (an error of the ear as I venture to think, and due perhaps to dictation) we have a pregnant construction; ‘hast loved’ = ‘hast lovingly drawn,’ ‘as if the love of God, shining on the soul,

(so) bitter<sup>a</sup>; and thou hast 'kept my soul from the pit of destruction; for thou hast cast behind thy back all my sins.

<sup>18</sup> For Sheól cannot give thanks to thee, Death cannot praise thee; those who have gone down to the grave cannot hope for thy faithfulness: <sup>19</sup> the living, the living, he can give thanks to thee, as I do this day: the father to the children shall make known thy faithfulness. <sup>20</sup> Jehovah is ready to deliver me: and my stringed instruments will we strike all the days of our life in the house of Jehovah.

had made it ascend out of the power of death' (Kay). A similar phrase in 2 Sam. xviii. 9 (Hebr.).

—Hast cast all my sins . . .] Such is the Divine magnanimity: He forgives and forgets. A similar figure for the pardon of sin in Mic. vii. 19. The connection of the clause ('for thou hast cast') is remarkable; Hezekiah evidently regards his peril of death as the punishment of his sins, see on v. 10.

<sup>18</sup> Jehovah delighteth in praises; therefore he held back so praiseful a servant from descending into Sheól.—Sheól cannot give thanks to thee . . .] The form of expression is mythological, as Del. truly remarks; the same conjunction of Sheól and Death, personified on a mythic basis, meets us in xxviii. 15, Ps. vi. 5 ('hell' and 'the grave' of A. V. should be Sheól or the Underworld); comp. Job xxviii. 22, 'Abaddon (or Perdition) and Death,' Prov. ii. 18, 'Death . . . the shades.' Hezekiah is not, however, an unconscious Nihilist; death is not to him the extinction of being. He believes in a future state, but in one without consciousness of God's presence, and consequently without moral or intellectual energy. The dismay with which he contemplates departure from this world is a measure of the value he sets on personal communion with God:—such dismay is (from a Christian point of view) one element in God's education of the Jews for a final 'illumination' of 'life and immortality' (2 Tim. i. 10, in the Greek).

<sup>19</sup> The living . . . can give thanks] Life, according to Hezekiah, is a constant succession of benefits and thanksgivings.—The father to the children] We need not ask (for we cannot possibly determine the point) whether Hezekiah had any children at this time. It is one of the familiar sentiments of the psalmists which is here reiterated; see Ps. xxii. 31, lxxviii. 3, 4.

<sup>20</sup> Is ready to deliver me] Or, was ready; but, as the context relates to the future, it is better to suppose the poet to be taking a hopeful prospect. Comp. xxxiii. 6, 'a store of salvations.'—Will we strike . . . in the house of Jehovah] 'The house of Jehovah' may be here a symbolical expression for that communion with God which the psalmists sometimes describe in similar language (Ps. v. 7, xv. 1, xxiii. 6, xxvii. 4). In this case 'we' will mean the royal poet and his family. But, more probably, Hezekiah identifies himself with the Levitical musicians, in whom, for the sake of the temple-service, he took so deep an interest, 2 Chr. xxix. 30.

their place, a difficulty evaded in A. V. by the inaccurate rendering, 'For Isaiah had said.' The true explanation was long ago seen by Kimchi, and is well given by Bishop Lowth on xxxviii. 4, 5. 'The narration of this chapter seems to be in some parts an abridgment of that of 2 Kings xx. The abridger, having finished his extract here with the 11th verse, seems to have observed that the 7th and 8th verses of 2 Kings xx. were wanted to complete the narration; he therefore added them at the end of the chapter, after he had inserted the song of Hezekiah, probably with marks for their insertion in their proper places; which marks were afterwards neglected by transcribers. Or a transcriber might omit them by mistake, and add them at the end of the chapter with such marks. Many transpositions<sup>1</sup> are, with great probability, to be accounted for in the same way.' The 'abridger' did not, however, in these verses, simply transcribe the text of 2 Kings (or the still earlier narrative on which 2 Kings and 'Isaiah' may both be based). The characteristic differences of

vv. 21 make the original mistake of its position somewhat less perceptible.—A cake of figs] Many commentators suppose the figs to be mentioned as a remedy current at the time. But surely so simple and unscientific a medicine would have been thought of, without applying to the prophet, by those about Hezekiah. The plaster of figs is rather a sign or symbol of the cure, like the water of the Jordan in the narrative of Naaman (2 Kings v. 10).—The boil] 'Non patet ex historiâ, cujus generis hæc fuerit inflammatio pestifera et lethifera, et difficile est id assequi per conjecturam' (Vitringa). Hitzig and Knobel too hastily assume this to be the plague-boil, and that the plague is the same which probably carried off the army of Sennacherib. But not only is this theory against chronology (we are not yet in the period of Sennacherib, see Introd.), but the Hebrew word for 'boil' (skkkin) is used of various kinds of eruptions (see e.g., Ex. ix. 9, Job ii. 7), but not of the plague-boil.—That he may recover] The reading in 2 Kings is an anticipatory notice, vii. 1, xx. 1.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

AS we have already seen (p. 205), the embassy of Merodach Baladan to Hezekiah is most naturally explained by referring it to the period of the invasion of Sargon. That the illness of Hezekiah synchronises with this event seems to be proved by the terms of the promise in

<sup>1</sup> Gesenius (on vv. 7, 8) gives an excellent example of this transposition in Job xxxi. 38-40, which evidently ought to stand a few verses back. (Merx places them between vv. 32 and 33.) Other instances of the same kind are viii. 21, 22, Ps. xii. 7, 8, xxxiv. 16, 17, Prov. iv. 18, 19,

xxxviii. 5, and the first verse of chap. xxxix. distinctly connects the Babylonian embassy with Hezekiah's illness. Sargon himself too, as already stated, lays great stress on the numerous embassies sent by Merodach Baladan to the various kings opposed to Assyria. It is, however, a singular fact that Sennacherib, as well as Sargon, mentions the trouble which he had with a king of Babylon called Merodach Baladan. In the Nebbi Yunus inscription, for instance, after returning thanks to Asshur, he at once passes to 'Marduk-bal-iddina, king of the land of Gan-dunias' (i.e., lower Chaldæa), of whom he says, 'The Chaldæans and Aramæans, with the army of Elam his help, like corn I swept; he, to the land of the sea, alone fled, &c.'<sup>1</sup> Hence Prof. Schrader, in the first edition of his K. A. T. (1872), proposed to distinguish the Merodach Baladan of Sennacherib's annals from the king of that name mentioned by Sargon, and to identify the former with the Merodach Baladan of Isa. xxxix. There was some plausibility in this suggestion. The repeated escapes and reassumptions of the crown, which the theory of there being only one Merodach Baladan during the reigns of both Sargon and Sennacherib compels us to admit, were almost too romantic for a sober and sceptical historian; and, as a matter of fact, Merodach Baladan was not an uncommon name of Babylonian kings.<sup>2</sup> But even Prof. Schrader has been converted to this view in his second edition, while M. Lenormant has all along maintained the identity of the Merodach Baladans of Sargon and Sennacherib. To the latter's skilfully written étude I have already (p. 209) referred the reader; one or two facts have since been added by Mr. St. Chad Boscawen, from whom I borrow the following supplement to my sketch of the historical circumstances of this group of chapters.

'From an inscription of the Assyrian monarch Tiglath Pileser II. (W. A. I., ii. 67, line 26, obv.), it appears that the family of Merodach Baladan ruled in southern Babylonia, on the shores of the Persian Gulf. In the inscription referred to, the Assyrian king stated that he received tribute of Merodach Baladan, 'son of Yakin, king of the land of the sea,' that is, of the shores of the Persian Gulf. This district of the marsh-land of the delta formed, for a period of many centuries, the place of refuge for fugitive rebels against the Assyrians, and it was here that was situated the province of Bit Yakin, the home of the tribe of Yakin; and in B.C. 731, Tiglath Pileser exacted tribute from the then ruling prince, Merodach Baladan.

'On the overthrow of Shalmaneser III. by Sargon, or during the years of weak rule, B.C. 725-722, when the Assyrian armies were chiefly engaged in the siege of the important Syrian town of Samaria, and consequently Babylonia was neglected, Merodach Baladan seized the Babylonian throne . . . Sargon, having captured Samaria, made an expedition against the new occupant of the Babylonian throne, but does not appear to have met with any great success . . . In his twelfth campaign, which took place in B.C. 710, the Assyrian monarch states that he defeated Merodach Baladan, and forced him to flee to Cyprus ; and after a long and victorious war in Babylonia, he states that, in the thirteenth year of his reign as king of Assyria, he captured the city of Su-an-na (an ancient name of Babylon), and proclaimed himself king of Babylon, as well as of the Assyrian empire. This dualism of rule is shown by a tablet, K 5280, which bears date as follows :—" Registered at Kalah (Nimroud), eponym of Bele, 13th year of Sargon, king of Assyria, 1st year king of Babylon." Thus the reign of Merodach Baladan ended in his twelfth year, B.C. 710, and thus the monuments confirm the Canon of Ptolemy.<sup>1</sup> This is [further] confirmed by the dates found on some small terra-cotta olives, now in the Louvre, which relate to the sale of some women at Babylon. . . .

'Though Ptolemy is no doubt correct in making the reign of Merodach Baladan end in B.C. 710, it does not appear that he was killed until some years after. Sargon assumed the government in Babylon in B.C. 709, and reigned five years, until B.C. 705, when he died, and his son Sennacherib succeeded him as King of Assyria. On the death of Sargon, the fugitive Babylonian monarch Merodach Baladan returned, and attempted to seize the throne of Babylon. In this he was for a time successful, but Sennacherib, in B.C. 704, drove him out of Babylon, and forced him to fly to his old home among the marshes in the delta, to the seat of his old kingdom of the sea-coast. Here, among his own people, he was so well protected that he was not found by the Assyrian monarch. Sennacherib then placed on the Babylonian throne a person called Belibni, who was the Belibus of the Canon of Ptolemy. This person reigned two years, B.C. 703-702, having ascended the throne in the latter part of B.C. 703. Now it is possible that, though defeated and dethroned, Merodach Baladan never relinquished his claim to the Babylonian throne, but counted his regnal years all the same from his accession in B.C. 722. . . .

'On the death of Sargon and accession of Sennacherib, Merodach Baladan raised a revolt in Babylonia, the expedition to suppress which formed the first campaign of Sennacherib in B.C. 704-3. . . . This had the desired effect, in that the Assyrian king marched against Hezekiah in his third campaign, and, having subdued him in his fourth campaign, he defeats his southern rebels in the revolts of Suzdub and Merodach Baladan.'<sup>2</sup> This was in B.C. 701-700.

Accuracy of narrative in chap. xxxix. Two points at any rate must be admitted—1. that there is a basis of tradition to the narrative (Merodach Baladan could not have left Hezekiah out of his negotiations) ; and 2. that the ideas which it enforces are those of the main current of the prophetic revelation. But there are also two points in which a later colouring, due to the editor, may be suspected, however unable we may be to arrive at a complete settlement of the question.

1. The leading political figure on the side of Judah is here the king, whereas elsewhere the direction of the state is in the hands of 'the house of David,' 'the princes,' 'the men of scorn who rule this people' (see notes on vii. 13, xxviii. 14-22, xxxii. 1). 2. The prediction of the subjugation of Judah by the king of Babylon is, for several reasons, unconnected with theology, not easily credible as an utterance of Isai: h (see below on vv. 5-7).<sup>a</sup>

specifies the tribe to which the king belonged, just as, in the narrative referred to on xxxvii. 12, 'Son of Adini' is a tribal appellation.<sup>2</sup> —For he had heard] Lit. 'and he heard'; appending the cause to the effect, as 2 Sam. xiv. 5 (Del.). In 2 Kings xx. 12, the simpler form of expression, 'for he had heard,' is used.—Another ostensible motive for the embassy is mentioned in 2 Chron. xxxii. 31, viz., 'to enquire of the portent that had taken place in the land,' i.e., of the phenomenon on the step-clock. The real motive was neither benevolence nor scientific curiosity, but political foresight (see p. 205). Hence the 'present,' v. 1, comp. xxx. 6. So Josephus, Ant. x. 2, 2.

—Showed them his storehouse] The fact that Hezekiah's treasury is still full proves that the Babylonian embassy must have preceded the tribute to Sargon. —His armoury] See xxii. 8.—

<sup>2</sup> The famous 'Jehu, Son of Omri' (Yahua, Son of Khumri) must be explained on these analogies; Khumri (Omri) means the people of Pit Khumri, i.e. of Samaria. There is, therefore, no discrepancy between 1 Kings ix., which represents Jehu as the founder of a new dynasty, and the Assyrian inscriptions. See Schrader, K. G. F., p. 207; Boscawen, T. S. B. A., vi. 16.

fine oil, and the whole of his armoury, and all that was found among his treasures: there was nothing in his house, or in the whole of his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not. <sup>3</sup> Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What have these men said, and whence come they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, From a far country have they come unto me, even from Babylon. <sup>4</sup> And he said, What have they seen in thy house? And Hezekiah said, All that is in my house they have seen: there is nothing among my treasures which I have not showed them. <sup>5</sup> And

<sup>3</sup> What have these men said . . . ] Isaiah, with that fearless assumption of a superior position which we have noticed in chap. vii., at once challenges the king to explain his conduct. Jehovah's will is opposed to all coquetting with foreign powers (comp. xxx. 1). That the ambassadors are still in Jerusalem appears from 'these men.'—From a far country] 'As though he would make his hospitality seem a duty' (Strachey): he could not show the door to strangers from such 'a far land!' Hezekiah does not directly meet the suspicion implied in Isaiah's first question. He knows denial would be useless, and would bring upon him the woe denounced on those who 'deeply hide their purpose from Jehovah' (xxix. 15).

<sup>5</sup> And Isaiah said . . . ] The prophet is evidently displeased with Hezekiah; but why? The Chronicler says it is because the king's 'heart was lifted up' (2 Chron. xxxii. 25), i.e., on account of the vanity implied in the king's exhibition of his treasures. This is no doubt an important element of the truth (comp. ii. 12-17). But was it merely vanity which prompted the king thus to throw open his treasures? Surely not. It was to satisfy the emissaries of Merodach Bala-dan that Hezekiah had considerable resources, and was worthy of becoming his ally on equal terms. Isaiah, who saw so deeply into the heart of his contemporaries, no doubt read this in Hezekiah's conduct. To him, as a prophet of Jehovah, the king's fault was principally in allowing himself to be courted by a foreign potentate, as if it were not true that 'Jehovah had founded Zion,' and that 'the afflicted of his people could find refuge therein' (xiv. 32). His punishment should be corresponding to his sin. He thought to subscribe his quota to a profane coalition, and his treasures should be violently laid hold upon by 'wolves in sheeps' clothing.' Babylon had solicited friendship; she would end by enforcing slavery. Calm and dispassionate is the tone in which the prophet speaks. Charles the Great could not help weeping at the sight of the Northmen's vessels, prognosticating the calamities which those fell pirates would bring on the flourishing coasts of the Franks.<sup>1</sup> Jeremiah, himself a prophet, weeps at the thought of the cruelty of the Babylonians. But in Isaiah, contentment with the perfect will of God overpowers his emotional susceptibility; and whether he wrote chaps. xl.-lxvi. or not, it must at any rate be granted that he had a profound conviction of the irrevocable election of Jehovah's people (see vi. 13). That conviction was his stay in the prospect of temporary ruin for the kingdom of Judah. (This is written on the assumption

Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of Jehovah Sabáoth: 'Behold, the days are coming when all that is in thy house, and that which thy fathers have treasured up, shall be carried that the report of Isaiah's words in this chapter is in the main accurate. Granting that he foresaw the Babylonian captivity, I see nothing to be surprised at in the tone in which it is announced.)

<sup>6</sup> Shall be carried away to Babylon] A very striking circumstantial prediction. If we could be quite sure that it really proceeded from Isaiah, it would represent the highest point which that prophet's insight into the future attained, since it distinctly asserts that, not the Assyrians, then at the height of their power, but the Babylonians, shall be the instruments of the Divine vengeance. There is no reasonable doubt that this is what the prophecy means. A few faint attempts have, it is true, been made to show that it points, not to the great Babylonian exile, but to the captivity of Manasseh (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11), which, though not referred to in any known Assyrian inscription, is now generally admitted to be historically probable. The objection is twofold: 1. To make 'king of Babylon,' in v. 7, equivalent to 'king of Assyria' (as one might speak of the Prince of Wales under his second title of Duke of Cornwall), weakens the force of the prediction, for Sargon's second title of king of Babylon dates (see above, p. 236) from the dethronement, in B.C. 710, of Merodach Baladan, whose embassy supplies the starting-point of the narrative; and 2. even if Isaiah foresaw the assumption of the crown of Babylon by Sargon and Esar-haddon, still he could not refer to this fact without hopelessly mystifying Hezekiah. 'The king of Babylon,' in the prediction here ascribed to Isaiah, means the lord of that great world-empire (to adopt a convenient hyperbole) which succeeded Assyria; and the use of this expression implies that Isaiah foresaw the transference of power from Nineveh to Babylon. To Ewald, such a degree of foresight appears only natural, 'inasmuch as that state [Babylon], though often in dispute with Nineveh, was yet by its peculiar position . . . too closely entwined with Assyria, and it was really only a question whether Nineveh or Babylon should be the seat of universal dominion.'<sup>1</sup> Looking back from the vantage-ground of history, such an inference from the position of Babylon may appear only natural, but I doubt whether it can be called probable. The 'question' mentioned by Ewald had not yet 'come within the range of practical politics.' Assyria had shown no signs of weakness; Babylonia's ablest monarch, Merodach Baladan, was on the verge of that calamity which was announced in solemn tones by Isaiah himself (xxi. 1-10). If the writer of xxi. 9, 10 did foresee the transference of the centre of power, it can only be called an extra-natural or super-natural phenomenon.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> History of Israel, iv. 188. Ewald continues: 'It accordingly flashed like lightning across Isaiah's mind that Babylon, attracted by those very treasures, &c., might in the future become dangerous to that same kingdom of Judah which it was now flattering.' (One is compelled sometimes to abridge the involved sentences of this great historical critic, but weak stylist.)

<sup>2</sup> Sir Edward Strachey, a thoughtful as well as reverent student of Isaiah, actually holds that, both here and in xiv. 4, 'king of Babylon' = 'king of Assyria.' This startling identification (see my remark above, p. 81) he defends by supposing that 'Babylon' throughout Isaiah is 'a monogram or ideograph' (the figure will be clear to those who know anything of the cuneiform method of writing) for the capital of the Assyrian empire. 'So,' he remarks, 'the Euphrates, not the Tigris, is the river which is to overflow the land of Immanuel (vii. 20, viii. 7, 8); . . . Babylon, not Nineveh, supplies the forces which besiege Tyre (xxiii. 13); and, to those who are content to

phesy, I am willing to assent to any reasonable inference from it, but on several accounts it appears to me improbable that he did so. For (1) I can find no analogy for it in the great age of prophecy. The famous prophecy in Micah (iv. 10), 'Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion . . . and thou shalt go to Babylon,' is not a parallel passage, for the context shows that Babylon is mentioned there only as a part of the Assyrian empire (see Mic. v. 5, 6). There is no way to avoid this admission, except indeed the hypothesis that the clause respecting 'going to Babylon' is interpolated. (See further, Last Words, vol. ii.) (2) In xxi. 1-10 Isaiah announces the fall of Merodach Baladan's kingdom of Babylon. How can Hezekiah have harmonised such apparently inconsistent predictions as the fall of Babylon and the subjugation of Judah by Babylon? Yet even if predictions be intended partly for future readers, they are still primarily addressed to the prophet's contemporaries. Would Isaiah have thrown his royal friend and disciple into dire perplexity for the sake of generations yet unborn? (3) As a matter of fact, Hezekiah delivered up 'all the silver in the house of Jehovah and in the treasures of the king's house' to Sargon (2 Kings xviii. 15). Why did not Isaiah rather foretell this nearer and more personal chastisement? By postponing Hezekiah's penalty so long, did he not run the risk of shaking the king's faith in his prophetic mission? And how could he have allowed Hezekiah to repose on the thought that 'peace and steadfastness (or stability) should be in his days,' when so severe a trial as Sennacherib's invasion was reserved for his old age?—I conclude, therefore, (while fully recognising the complexity of the problem,) that the later editor has given his own colouring (comp. on xxxvii. 20) to the vague tradition which he may have received of Isaiah's prophetic condemnation of Hezekiah's intercourse with Merodach Baladan. If any reader feels disappointed at this result (which implies that the Jews had not yet discerned the full severity of the law of truthfulness), it may be some compensation to him that the ancient editor shows by this fictitious (or nearly fictitious) prophecy that he fully believed chaps. xl.-lxvi. to be the work of the great Isaiah. For he would never have given this 'colouring' which I have spoken of to Isaiah's reproof of Hezekiah without some real or supposed ground. This ground was the existence of a series of prophetic discourses from the pen, as he believed, of Isaiah, and intended for the Jewish exiles in Babylon. If Isaiah wrote those discourses which presuppose the Captivity, he surely must at some time or other have predicted the captivity (criticism of this elementary order is, I believe, by no means so modern as some suppose). What opportunity so fit or natural as the reproof which take the text as it is, I may further quote the denunciations of Babylon in chap. xxi. and the latter half of the book' (Jewish History and Politics, p. 168). But as to the first set of passages, the Euphrates is there taken as a symbol of the Assyrian empire (which, under Tiglath Pileser, included Babylonia), because it would have been unnatural to speak of a more northerly river as overflowing into Judah. As to xxiii. 13 (see my note), it is a mistake to suppose that the Kasdim are pointed to as the destroyers of Tyre: as to xxi. 1-10, it is probably the independent kingdom of Merodach Baladan, the ruin of which is announced (see pp. 126, 127); and as to the latter half of the book, Sir E. Strachey stands alone in thinking (if he seriously does so) that the real or assumed standing-ground of the prophet is any other than the Babylonian captivity.

shall they take away, and they shall become <sup>c</sup>chamberlains in the palace of the king of Babylon. <sup>8</sup> And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, Good is the word of Jehovah which thou hast spoken. And he said, <sup>d</sup> For peace and steadfastness <sup>d</sup> will remain in my days.

according (perhaps) to tradition, he actually addressed to Hezekiah for that unstable monarch's coquetry with the Babylonian power? (So that the tradition of the unity of authorship can be traced back as early as this editor of chap. xxxix.)

<sup>7</sup> And of thy sons who shall issue from thee] It has been questioned whether this means the immediate offspring of Hezekiah, or, more widely, his descendants. Comp. xxxviii. 5, 'David thy father;' and Gen. xvii. 6, 'kings shall issue from thee.' In the latter case, the phrase will refer to the descendants of the king who should be alive at the Babylonish captivity (comp. Dan. i. 3, 4). This explanation seems to me by far the more probable. It is favoured at once by the form of the phrase ('of thy sons,' implying that there was a considerable number), and by Hezekiah's expression of confidence in the next verse that the prophecy would not be fulfilled in his life-time:—he could not be sure of this, if the prophecy referred to his immediate offspring.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Good is the word . . . in my days] The Syriac version connects the two sayings of Hezekiah directly, omitting 'and he said': 'Good is the word of Jehovah which thou hast spoken, that there shall be,' &c.; and this is at any rate the sense of the second saying. Hezekiah not only acquiesces in the will of Jehovah, like Eli (1 Sam. iii. 18), but congratulates himself on his own personal safety. It would no doubt have been the nobler course to cry, 'Me, me, adsum qui feci,'<sup>2</sup> and to beg that he alone might bear the punishment, as he alone had sinned. But the principle of the solidarity of the forefather and his posterity, and of the king and his people, prevails almost throughout the Old Testament:—in Jer. xxxi. 29, 30, and Ezek. xviii. we have apparently the first revelation of a higher law of morality. From the point of view which the narrator rightly ascribes to Hezekiah, that king could not well speak otherwise than he did (unless we assume a suspension of the laws of psychology). Even from a higher standing-ground we must admit that he fails, not by what he says, but by what he omits to say. For it was a great mercy that at least a respite was granted both to the kings and to the people of Judah. 'Steadfastness,' i.e., continuance. There is the same combination of words, with the same sense, in Jer. xiv. 13; comp. also Isa. xxxiii. 6. 'In my days,' i.e., as long as I live, comp. Ps. cxvi. 2 (Kay).

<sup>2</sup> It is tempting to quote the fine saying of David, 'Lo, I have sinned, and I have done perversely; but these sheep, what have they done?' (2 Sam. xxiv. 17.) But unfortunately he continues, 'Let thine hand, I pray, be against me and against my father's house.'

CHAPTERS XL-LXVI.

WE have now arrived at the most trying and yet most fascinating part of our subject—the interpretation of the last twenty-seven chapters. Sad it is that, from the only admissible point of view—the philological, the problem of their date and literary origin still remains unsettled, for until we know under what circumstances a prophecy was written, portions at least of the exegesis cannot but remain vague and obscure. Even the arrangement of the book (if it may accurately be called a book) is by no means as clear as we could wish. On both these points I will at least indicate what I conceive to be the present state of the questions later, reserving a more complete discussion for a subsequent work. In the following commentary I shall leave it an open question whether the book was composed by Isaiah or by some other author or authors, and whether it falls into two, three, or more parts, but not whether it is in the fullest sense of the word prophetic. I hold, with Dr. Franz Delitzsch, that ‘if we only allow that the prophet really was a prophet, it is of no essential consequence to what age he belonged’<sup>1</sup>; and that, however limited the historical horizon of these chapters may be, the significance of their presentiments is not bounded by the Exile, but extends to the advent of the historical Christ, and even beyond. I wish I could proceed with the same influential critic to make the further admission that the standing-ground of the author throughout his book is the latter part of the Babylonian Captivity, and that ‘he is entirely carried away from his own times, and leads a pneumatic life [a life in the spirit] among the exiles.’ If this were only correct, it would greatly simplify the task of exegesis. Adhuc sub iudice lis est. All that we can say is, that at least for a large part of these twenty-seven chapters, it is generally admitted that the prophet writes as if he were living among the exiles at Babylon, ‘when the victories gained by Cyrus over the Medes and Lydians had begun to excite the expectations of the Jewish patriots,’<sup>2</sup> and where this is not so clearly the case the reader will find it candidly stated in the notes.

The Book of Isaiah Chronologically Arranged contains a tolerably full sketch of the line of thought, so far as it can be traced, throughout the prophecy. It will be noticed that the exegesis in the present work differs considerably from that in the former; I have had, however, more to develope and to supplement than to retract. With regard to the arrangement of the book, I cannot see my way to adopt any of the current redistributions of the prophecies. Occasionally, no doubt, the chapters in our Bibles are evidently misdivided, and here I have carefully noted the fact. But in the main I have accepted the existing arrangement, without comment or criticism. Some division of the book was necessary; and, in default of scientific accuracy, practical convenience seemed the first consideration.

Let us now approach with sympathetic minds this Gospel before the Gospel. Though written primarily for the exiles at Babylon, its scope is as wide as that of any part of the New Testament, and New Testament qualifications are required alike in the interpreter and in his readers.

CHAPTER XL.

Contents.—The prophet describes his commission (vv. 1–11); declares the infinite perfections of Jehovah, and rebukes the stupidity of idolaters, and the weak faith of Jehovah's worshippers (vv. 12–31).

<sup>1</sup> Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. <sup>2</sup> Speak ye to the heart of Jerusalem, and call unto her, that her warfare is fulfilled, that her guilt is paid off, that she hath received

<sup>1</sup> Comfort ye, comfort ye] The theme, not only of chap. xl., but of the whole prophecy which this chapter introduces; comp. xxxv. 3, 4, xli. 2. The persons addressed are the prophets (as the Targ. already states at v. 1), not the priests (as Sept. interpolates in v. 2), for the next verse continues 'Call ye' (see below). The prophets formed a numerous body, not only in Isaiah's time (iii. 1, xxix. 10, 20), but in the Babylonian exile (Jer. xxix. 1).—My people] No longer 'Not-my-people' (Hos. i. 9), no longer 'this people' (see on vi. 9)—both phrases implying Jehovah's temporary rejection of Israel; but again 'My people.'

<sup>2</sup> Speak ye to the heart . . . and call] A single, concise declaration of God's loving will was not enough. The prophets are therefore told more distinctly still both what they are to speak and how. Their message is to be delivered encouragingly ('to the heart') and with a full clear note ('call'). The former phrase reminds us especially of Hos. ii. 16 (A. V. 14). 'To call' is a synonym for 'to prophesy'; so in the Hebr. of lviii. 1, lxi. 1, 2, Zech. i. 14, Jon. iii. 2,

Mohammed, in the Korán, constantly uses the corresponding Arabic word in a similar way; e.g. 'Call thou, in the name of thy Lord who created' (Sura xcvi. 1). The prophetic announcement falls into three parallel statements.—Her warfare] i.e., her enforced hardships (there is a similar use of guerra in Dante and Petrarca). The metaphor is very suggestive of the peculiar troubles of military service in ancient times; comp. the humorous Egyptian description given by M. Lenormant, Ancient History of the East, i. 315.—Notice here the first of a series of parallels between II. Isaiah and Job; see Job vii. 1, 'Hath not man a warfare (i.e. a hard service) upon earth'—in Job xiv. 14 the phrase has a rather different application.—Her guilt] i.e., the penalty of her guilt.—Is paid off] Lit. is satisfied. The sense is determined by Lev. xxvi. 41, 43, comp. 34 (Q. P. B.). See note on li. 21.—That she hath received] This is the historic perfect, as is clearly shown by the parallelism. The view of Ges., Hitz., Ew., that it is a prophetic perfect, and stands for 'she shall receive,' is bound up with a wrong interpretation of the closing words of the verse.—Double for all her sins] It has been said that this is a rhetorical hyperbole, designed to set the compassionate love of God in the clearest light, that God condescends to accuse Himself, as if He had been too severe. Others, objecting to this 'as if,' illustrate by the prophetic passages which assert an over-severity on the part of the heathen rulers of Israel (see xlvii. 6, Jer. i. 7, 11, 17, Zech. i. 15). It is simpler, however, to take 'double' in the sense of 'amply sufficient'; comp. Jer. xvii. 18, 'Ruin them with double ruin,' Rev. xviii. 6, 'Double unto her double according to her works.'—Ges., Hitz., Ew. would render 'double (compensation) for all her penalties, referring for the rendering 'penalties' to v. 18 (where, however, such a meaning is improbable), and Zech. xiv. 19, and for the idea to lxi. 7, Jer. xvi. 14–18?, Zech. ix. 12, comp. Job xlii. 12. But this is not favoured by the plural, and is opposed by the context (see last note).

<sup>3</sup> Here begins a triad of invitations, each containing three verses (vv. 3–5, 6–8, 9–11).—Hark ! one that calleth] The second message relates to something to be done for Jehovah; it is therefore naturally ascribed to a non-divine though still supernatural voice. The poetic effect is much heightened by the mystery. Comp. li. 9, lii. 1, lvii. 14, lxii. 10. Similar voices are spoken of in the Book of Revelation (Rev. i. 10, 12, iv. 1, x. 4, 8), and are to be explained on these analogies.—In the wilderness] Not to be joined with 'one crieth' (as Sept., Vulg., and the Synoptic Gospels, for this would spoil the parallelism of the next line. The accents, too, are against this conjunction.—Clear ye . . .] An allusion to the well-known practice of eastern monarchs on their progresses (see Bishop Lowth). In the Synoptic Gospels (Matt. iii. 3, Mark i. 3, Luke iii. 4) the passage is taken metaphorically of the preparation of the heart (cf. Ps. lxxxiv. 5, 'highways in their heart'), and so it must perforce be taken, if the command is addressed, as in vv. 1, 2, to the prophets. The parallel passages xlix. 11, lvii. 14, lxii. 10, cf. xxxv. 8, are, however, opposed to this view, and prove that we have here a grand poetic symbol, introduced to heighten the effect, and impress the reader with the greatness of the event. The pioneers, then, are (not the tribes of the wilderness, as Knobel thinks, but) supernatural, angelic beings. In xxxv. 8 no pioneers are mentioned:—the highway for the redeemed is one 'not made with hands.'—In the desert] It is true, the ordinary way from Babylon to Jerusalem, by Damascus, Palmyra, Thapsacus, for the most part went round, and not through, the desert. It is the importunity of faith which insists on going the nearest way, in defiance of all obstacles. There seems to be also an allusion to the journey through the desert at the Exodus, Egypt being typical of Babylon; see xlviii. 21, lii. 12, cf. xi. 16.—Del. rightly sees an allusion to this passage in Ps. lxviii. 4 (5); see Q. P. B.—Jehovah's way] The return of Jehovah to Palestine is a compendious expression for the restoration of the exiles, and for the renewal of all the spiritual privileges of which the Jews had been deprived. That this is the case is shown by lxii. 10, 11, in which, side by side, we have the command to make a road for 'the people' (i.e., the Jewish exiles), and a promise word for word the same as xl. 10 b. So, too, in lii. 8 we have the return of Jehovah mentioned alone, and directly afterwards (v. 12), the re-

be exalted, and every mountain and hill be brought low, and let that which is rugged become a table-land, and the ridges a highland plain; <sup>5</sup> and then shall reveal itself the glory of Jehovah, and all flesh together shall see it: for the mouth of Jehovah hath spoken it.' <sup>6</sup> Hark! one that saith 'Call.' And <sup>a</sup> one said, <sup>a</sup> 'What shall I call?' 'All flesh is grass, and all turn of the hosts of Israel under the generalship of Jehovah. There is therefore no reason to infer with Seinecke from passages like xl. 3-10, that Isa. xl.-lxvi. was written for those Jews who were left behind by Nebuchadnezzar in Palestine.

<sup>5</sup> All flesh shall see it] Comp. Ps. xcvi. 6. The 'seeing' is twofold, as appears from the sequel (see chap. lx.). It is (1) the natural sight of Jehovah's glorious deeds on behalf of his people, and (2) the spiritual recognition of Jehovah as the Lord. It is possible for Jehovah's Arm to 'reveal itself' and yet for the spiritual eye to be closed to it; see liii. 1 (same word).

<sup>6</sup> And one said] viz., the prophet, rapt by a vision out of his ordinary self (comp. xxi. 6-9, 11, 12, 2 Cor. xii. 2-4). Throughout his discourses, the self-effacement of the inspired author is very remarkable (comp. on xlviii. 16 b).—All flesh is grass] It is doubtful whether this and the next verse (or even the next two verses) belong to the questioner, or to the voice which said, 'Call.' In the former case, the preceding question is one of despondency, and 'All flesh is grass' gives the reason of this despondency:—'How can "all flesh" be destined to see such a glorious sight (v. 5), when it is subject to the law of decay and death?' To this implied question, v. 8 may be regarded as the answer. (So Kay, who improves the sense by taking 'the people' in v. 7 to mean Israel.) This view is surely unnatural. We cannot dispense with some fresh tidings for the herald, and the separation of v. 8 from v. 7 is against the style of the Book of Isaiah, in both parts of which repetition of a phrase with a slight addition or modification is a favourite oratorical turn (see Delitzsch, Isaiah, E. T., ii. 134). I therefore adhere to the ordinary view, which regards vv. 6 b-8 as the answer of 'the Voice,' who draws an antithesis between the decay—it may be, the premature decay (for the breath of Jehovah 'bloweth' when 'it listeth')—to which even the brightest and best of earthly things are liable, and the necessary permanence of Jehovah and his revelation.—This is the first time that the phrase 'all flesh' occurs in the Book of Isaiah; we meet with it again in xlix. 26, lxvi. 16, 23, 24, also four times in Jeremiah, thrice in Ezekiel, once in Zechariah (ii. 17), also repeatedly in the Pentateuch, and it would be well worth while to examine the Pentateuch-sections in which it occurs with a view to illustrating their date. Jeremiah and Deuteronomy (v. 23 Hebr.) are the only pre-Exile books of absolutely certain date in which the phrase is found. It would, however, naturally be employed in dealing with subjects of universal, as opposed to merely Jewish, interest; so that the question for decision is, Was the present subject (whether it be the Flood, or the fall of the world-empires) a natural subject for any particular inspired writer to take up at the time to which he is commonly referred?—Dr. Weir makes the suggestive remark that the sentence 'All flesh is grass' is 'quite in the spirit of ii. 22' ('man in whose nostrils is a breath'). Unfortunately this does not greatly confirm the Isaianic origin of the passage before us, for the authorship of ii. 22 is open to grave doubt (see my note ad loc.).—It would be impossible within reasonable limits to treat every linguistic phenomenon even briefly, but it seemed right thus to draw the reader's attention to the important bearing which a single word, or group of words, may have on the literary problems of the Bible.—The grace thereof The word (khl̄sed) nowhere else has this meaning, but its synonym (khl̄n) has the double sense of favour and grace or gracefulness.

the grace thereof like flowers of the field. <sup>7b</sup> Dry is the grass, faded are the flowers, if the breath of Jehovah hath blown thereon; surely the people is grass.<sup>b</sup> <sup>8</sup> Dry is the grass, faded are the flowers, but the word of our God shall stand for ever.'

<sup>7</sup> Surely the people is grass The statement is resumptive. 'Surely the human folk (comp. xlii. 5, xliv. 7) is as perishable as grass (comp. Ps. xc. 5, 6). Israel and Assyria are both politically extinct, and Babylon is hurrying to its end.' The thought is suggested, though not expressed, that if Israel is to rise again from its ashes, it can only be by abstaining from all attempts at secular aggrandisement. The new Israel will be in all the circumstances of its growth supernatural. Others (Kay, Seinecke, Oort, Naegelsbach) make 'the people' = Israel, but this limitation hardly suits the context, which refers to 'all flesh.'

<sup>8</sup> The word . . . shall stand i.e., specially the promise or prophecy concerning Israel, comp. xliv. 26, xlv. 19, lii. 6, lxiii. 1, Jer. xlv. 28, 29, of which all mankind shall experience the saving fruits.

<sup>9</sup> Here the prophet is transported mentally to Palestine and to the time immediately before the fulfilment of the promise. He calls upon Jerusalem to announce to her 'daughter'-cities (cf. Ezek. xvi. 46–48) the glad tidings of the approach of their God. By Jerusalem he means not merely the phenomenal or actual Jerusalem in its state of desolation, but the ideal Jerusalem, which has walls and watchmen (lii. 8, 9, cf. xlix. 16), for it is in the supersensible world, 'graven on the palms of [Jehovah's] hands' (xlix. 16). The ideal Jerusalem, in this prophecy, corresponds to the ideal Israel, though sometimes (e.g., lii. 1, 2) the two conceptions—the ideal and the phenomenal—are almost merged in one. See further xlix. 14–19, lxii. 6, and comp. Rev. xxi. 10 ('the city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God'). The passage of the apocryphal Book of Baruch, quoted in my note on xlix. 16, may also fitly be compared in this connection. (Alt. rend. is less poetical; see however Kay's note.)

<sup>10</sup> His Arm This is not merely figurative (as in xxx. 30), but one of the many symbolic expressions for the manifestation of the Deity—touching monuments of a childlike faith. Analogous phrases are 'the Face of Jehovah' (note on i. 12), his 'Name' (note on xxx. 27), his 'sword' (xxvii. 1, xxxiv. 5), and his 'Hand' (viii. 11, lix. 1). 'Arm of

<sup>12</sup>Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and regulated the heavens with a span, and comprehended the

Jehovah' more especially embodies the attribute of Almightyness. In this symbolic sense it occurs only in II. Isaiah (xl. 10, li. 5, 9, lii. 10, liii. 1, lix. 16, lxiii. 5, 12).—Ruling for him] i.e., in his interest, Israel being 'formed for Jehovah' (lxiii. 21), or, in the language of the Vulgate (Ex. xix. 5), his peculium. Comp. lix. 16, Ps. xcvi. 1 (a psalm deeply influenced by II. Isaiah).—His wage . . . his recompence] The reward which he gives to his faithful ones (see xlix. 4, lxiii. 7, 8), perhaps with the collateral meaning of retribution to his enemies (so 'recompence,' lxxv. 7).

<sup>11</sup>At first sight it appears as if there were here a sudden transition. Were it really so, the effect would be most thrilling. But this verse is in fact closely connected with the preceding one ; it describes the reward of which we have just been told.—Will he feed his flock] The Israelites were the flock of Jehovah (Ps. lxxvii. 20, lxxx. 1), but during the Captivity a scattered and miserable flock. Jeremiah says that his eye 'shall run down with tears, because the flock of Jehovah is carried away captive' (Jer. xiii. 17). The change in the fortunes of the Jews is compared by the prophets to a shepherd's seeking his lost sheep, and feeding them again in green pastures (Jer. xxxi. 10, l. 19, Ezek. xxxiv. 11-16). The reference is not so much to the homeward journey of the exiles as to the state of temporal and spiritual happiness in which they would find themselves on their return. The same figures occur in a psalm, where a reference to the return from exile is excluded by the pre-Exile date, ' . . . feed them also, and carry them for ever' (Ps. xxviii. 9).—Will he lead] Comp. Gen. xxxiii. 13, 'If men should overdrive them (i.e., those which give suck) one day, all the flock will die.'

<sup>12</sup>The homily which begins here is addressed to the phenomenal or actual Israel, many of whose members were in danger from a subtle combination of the forces of unbelief within and polytheism without. It seemed as if Jehovah had forgotten his people, and as unsophisticated man cannot dispense with a Divine patron, many Jews were on the point of (literally) falling into idolatry. The Book of Job here, as so often, supplies us with a parallel. Job indeed was not tempted to polytheism ; if he had broken away entirely from Jehovah, he would have stood alone, like Dante's Capaneo and Milton's Satan. But his spiritual trials were similar to those of the Jews ; his confidence in the justice of Eloah (as a non-Israelite he does not use the name Jehovah) was thoroughly shaken. The true God condescends to meet Job personally. He addresses him in a speech entirely made up of questions full of a 'divine irony,' the second of which reminds us strongly of the speech of Jehovah in our prophecy. It runs thus, 'Who set its (the earth's) measures, if thou knowest ? or who stretched out a line upon it ?' (Job xxxviii. 5.) The answer in Job, in a parallel passage in Proverbs, and in II. Isaiah, is the same, 'Who but Jehovah?' (Ges., Kay, Naeg.

dust of the earth in a tierce, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance? <sup>13</sup> Who 'hath regulated' the Spirit of Jehovah, and being his counsellor informed him? <sup>14</sup> With whom hath he taken counsel, that he might instruct him, and teach him as to the path of right, and teach him knowledge, and inform him of the way of perfect discretion? <sup>15</sup> Behold, nations are accounted as a drop on a bucket, and as * Hath directed, Targ., Pesh., A. V., Vit. Hath known, Sept. (Dr. Weir thinks this a different reading, comp. v. 21, in the Hebr. and the Greek; but it may be simply a paraphrase. The Hebr. may also mean 'hath weighed' (as Prov. xvi. 2), and hence 'hath tested,' or 'obtained accurate knowledge of;' so Hitz., Naeg., Krüger).

suppose the answer in our prophecy to be 'No man,' which seems to be confirmed by vv. 13, 14; see, however, the next note.) Some, e.g. Naeg., have taken offence at the implied ascription of a 'hollow of the hand,' a 'span,' and a 'tierce' to Jehovah; but prophecy regards earthly things as types and shadows of the heavenly. Jehovah has an Arm in this very chapter (v. 10), 'hands' in xlix. 16, a 'seah,' or a 'double Seah' in xxvii. 8, here and in Ps. lxxx. 5 a 'tierce.'—A tierce is (as the Hebr. word shalish implies) the third part of some larger measure (probably of an ephah):—it was a very small measure for creation, observes Del. (see Ps. loc. cit.), but a large one for tears. Obs., the conception of the orderliness of creation took almost as firm a hold of the Hebr. mind as the Greek. Hence the Greek writer of Wisdom need not be credited with Alexandrinism when he writes (xi. 20), 'Thou hast ordered all things by measure and number and weight.' The same idea of the minuteness of God's creative arrangements is expressed by our prophet metaphorically.

<sup>13</sup> Another question, equally ironical with the former. The correctness of the reading 'regulated' is slightly doubtful, but the repetition of the verb from v. 12 may perhaps have a special significance. The speaker, as I understand the passage, professes to sympathise with one of the theological difficulties of the Jews, and treats it for a moment as an open question. It is this:—Jehovah, and he alone, 'regulated' or fixed the proportions of heaven and earth, but who hath regulated the Spirit of Jehovah? Was this almighty demiurge himself absolutely free? May not even Omnipotence be subject to conditions? May there not be an equal or superior power, whose counsel must be deferred to even by Jehovah? The Spirit of Jehovah is the life-giving principle in the Deity, and is especially mentioned in connection with creation (Gen. i. 2, Ps. civ. 30, Job xxxiii. 4). In II. Isaiah there is a marked tendency to hypostatise the Spirit; here, for instance, consciousness and intelligence are distinctly predicated of the Spirit (see further on lxiii. 10).

<sup>14</sup> With whom hath he taken counsel] Contrast the Babylonian myth of a joint action of Bel and the gods in the creation of man, and the Iranian of a co-creatorship of Ormuzd and the Amshaspands (Vendidad, xix. 34). But there is no direct reference to either of these myths. In fact, neither Babylonians nor Persians had fixed cosmogonies.

<sup>15</sup> Behold] To prepare the reader for a new and pregnant instance of Jehovah's might. From nature we pass to history.—Countries] Literally 'habitable lands.' The word occurs three times in the singular in the first part of Isaiah, thirteen fine dust on a balance; behold, he lifteth up 'countries as a straw. <sup>16</sup> (And Lebanon is not sufficient for burning, nor its beasts sufficient for burnt offerings). <sup>17</sup> All the nations are as nothing before him; as of nought and (as) Chaos they are accounted of him. <sup>18</sup> To what then can ye liken God? and what similitude can ye place beside him?

times in the plural in the second part (including xxiv. 15), and once in the first (xi. 11). In usage it is generally applied to the distant countries of the West, though in Ezek. xxvii. 15 it may include India. Bp. Lowth goes so far as to render it generally in II. Isaiah, 'distant countries,' and distance is certainly implied in xli. 5, xlix. 1, lx. 9, lxvi. 19. This is at any rate better than 'islands' or 'sea-coasts,' seeing that in II. Isaiah it is generally parallel to 'nations.' 'The frequency with which this word occurs is very remarkable as indicating the wide range of thought which distinguishes this prophecy' (Weir). The two Psalm-passages in which it is found (lxxii. 10, xcvi. 1) imply imitation of II. Isaiah.

<sup>16</sup> An inference from v. 16. Jehovah being so far greater than man, how can any sacrificial rites be worthy of him? Judah no doubt was poor in wood,<sup>1</sup> but even Lebanon, were it in the hands of Jehovah's worshippers, would not yield wood enough to do Him honour.

<sup>17</sup> Of nought] The preposition is partitive. 'Nought' is regarded as a great concrete object, of which the nations are a part' (Hitzig). They belong to the category of nothingness. Same idiom in xli. 24, xliv. 11, Ps. lxii. 10.—Chaos] Hebr. lôhû, one of the two words (lôhû va-bôhû) used together in Gen. i. 2, to signify the formless waste of chaos. It is the strongest expression in the language for lifelessness, futility, and desolation, and occurs eight times in II. Isaiah (besides xxiv. 10, xxxiv. 11), once only in I. Isaiah (xxix. 21).

<sup>18</sup> What similitude . . . ] The prophet might at first sight be supposed to deprecate idolatry. But it does not appear that the Jews addressed in these chapters made images of Jehovah, and the parallel passages v. 25 and xlvi. 5 seem to show that the incomparableness, the uniqueness, of Jehovah is the truth which absorbs the prophet's mind. 'Similitude' (d'mûth) must therefore not be taken in the sense of 'image' (as in 2 Kings

Vv. 19, 20. The uniqueness of Jehovah illustrated by describing how the idol-gods, first of the rich, and then of the poor, are manufactured. The prophet's tone is sarcastic. While monotheism was still struggling for existence, it was impossible to seek a common ground with polytheists, like St. Paul at the Areopagus, or with cool deliberate hand to mete out justice to the original intention of idolatries. The preacher of monotheism to a wavering and uncertain people must be instant 'in season and out of season.' A whole series of ironical descriptions, of which this is the first, remains to attest the prophet's earnestness. See xli. 7, xliv. 9-17, xlvi. 6, and comp. Hab. ii. 18, 19, Jer. x. 1-9, Ps. cxv. 4-7, cxxxv. 15-18, and especially the apocryphal Epistle of Jeremy (Baruch vi.).—We are not told whether the manufacturers of idols were themselves Israelites.

xvi. 10), but in that of 'comparable object.'

<sup>19</sup> The image] This is put first for emphasis. Surely ye will not compare such an object as this to Jehovah?—Chains] To fasten the idol to the wall.

<sup>20</sup> The transition to v. 20 is so abrupt that I cannot help conjecturing that something has dropped out of the first part of the description.—He that is impoverished in offerings] Most commentators, since Kimchi, explain this, 'He that is unable by reason of his poverty to dedicate a costly image to his god.' But surely this puts great violence on the text; some error must have crept in.—The word rendered 'offerings' is frumah 'a lifting up,' sometimes rendered in A. V. of the Pentateuch, 'a heave-offering,' but which, in Ezekiel at any rate (see Ezek. xlv. 1, xlviii. 8, 12, 20, xlv. 13), also in Ex. xxv. 2 (and parallel passages), Ezra viii. 25, and here, must mean simply an offering, i.e., as Sept. understands it, something taken away (comp. use of verb in lvii. 14, Ezek. xxi. 31, Dan. viii. 11) from a larger mass, and set apart for God.

<sup>21</sup> An indignant double question (as v. 28).—Can ye not hear?] He means an inner hearing, the 'hearing heart,' of which Solomon speaks (1 Kings iii. 9).—From the beginning . . . from the foundations of the earth] In the beginning 'He founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods' (Ps. xxiv. 2), and ever since 'day unto day keeps pouring out speech, and night unto night declaring knowledge' (Ps. xix. 2). 'For from the creation of the world His invisible (attributes) are perceived, being understood by means of His works' (Rom. i. 20). Alt. rend. (see note <sup>b</sup>) injures the parallelism, and is rather less natural, as it requires us to take 'foundations' = 'origin,' or else metaphorically = 'the will and word of God.'

<sup>22</sup> The participial clauses are to be taken as admiring exclamations, out of logical connection. No subject and no verb are necessary. There can be but One of whom these predicates are true, and the thought of Him who maketh and preserveth all things fills the prophet's mind.—The circle of the earth] i.e., overarching the earth, Job xxii. 14, Prov. viii. 27.—As locusts] 'There we saw the giants . . . and we were in our own eyes as locusts' (Num. xiii. 33).—Stretched out the heavens] A characteristic phrase of II. Isaiah (see also xlii. 5, xlv. 24, xlv. 12, li. 13), found in Job (ix. 8), Zechariah (xii. 1), and one of the later Psalms (Ps. civ. 2). A presumption, which however derives its main force from other corroborating circumstances, arises that these books, or parts of books, are not so widely separated in time as some suppose.—As fine cloth . . . tent] Natural comparisons to the childlike Semitic nations. A Psalmist uses the latter (Ps. xix. 4); comp. Himmelszelt. For the Babylonian view, see Lenormant, La Magie, p. 142. Obs., doq = 'fine cloth'; daq = 'fine dust' (v. 15).

<sup>24</sup> Yea, they were never planted] To a common eye Nineveh and Babylon seemed planted for eternity, firmly rooted in the soil, but to the prophets, regarding them from the point of view of the future, they seemed as though they had never been. 'If He destroy him from his place,' says Bildad, 'it will deny him, (saying,) I have never seen thee' (Job viii. 18). So Ibn Ezra, Luzzatto, Kay. The difficulty, on this theory of the meaning, is in connecting the first half of the verse with the second. The truth perhaps is that there is no logical connection. The prophet first exclaims, They never can have been really planted; then—another form of expressing the same thought, They were planted indeed, but He blew upon them, and all was over. According to the first view, their story was a comedy; according to the second, a tragic reality.—The common rend. is rather a paraphrase, and obliges us to deviate unwarrantably from the letter of the original. 'They were not planted' is a negative statement; 'they were scarcely planted' involves the positive affirmation that they were (though only just) planted.

<sup>25</sup> The Holy One] The Hebr. qādōsh is like a proper name, being without the article, and without the defining words 'of Israel,' which we always find elsewhere, except lvii. 15, Job vi. 10, Hab. iii. 3, Ps. xxii. 3 (4). Comp. the use of q'dōshim, without the article, as an equivalent of Yahveh, Prov. ix. 10, xxx. 3, Hos. xii. 1.

<sup>26</sup> A third time the prophet takes up the theme of the uniqueness of Jehovah.—Who hath created] Here we have the first occurrence of the verb bārā 'to create':—it is found in II. Isaiah no less than twenty times (once in I. Isaiah, viz., iv. 5, and once in Amos iv. 13), another proof of the 'wide range of thought' in this prophecy (see on v. 15).—These] i.e., these (—yonder) heavens.—He who bringeth out their host] This is not the answer to the foregoing question, which in fact, to the prophet, answers itself. The participle is to be explained like those in vv. 22, 23. 'Bringeth out,' i.e., into the field; it is a military term, comp. 2 Sam. v. 2, xi. 1 (Hitz.). The 'host' are the stars, which are described as called over, like soldiers at the roll-call; comp. Job xxv. 3, where the 'bands' spoken of are the stars (see v. 5), and also the imitation in Ps. cxlvii. 4, 5:—

[their full] number, (he calleth them all by name) through abounding might and being firm of strength; not one is missing.

<sup>27</sup> Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest, O Israel, My way is hidden from Jehovah, and my right hath been let slip by my God? <sup>28</sup> Hast thou not perceived? hast thou not heard? An everlasting God is Jehovah, creator of the ends of the earth; he fainteth not, neither is he weary; there is no searching of his understanding; <sup>29</sup> who giveth to the weary

He counteth the number of the stars,
Calleth them all by (their) names, Great is our Lord, and abounding in might,
Of his understanding there is no number
(i.e. calculation).

According to the Bundelesh (chap. v.), the stars form a host divided into several parts, and ranged under leaders (Spiegel, Avesta, vol. iii. p. xxxi.). — By name i.e., by their names. Dr. Weir quotes John x. 3, 'He calleth his own sheep by name.' The prophet speaks from the point of view of the exiles, who learned that the constellations had names in Babylon.

<sup>27</sup> Here the prophet turns to the despondent yet not unbelieving kernel of the nation. Those who form it complain that they are utterly forsaken by 'their God' (he is still their God), that their 'way' (the irksome condition of exile) is hidden from his view (comp. lxxv. 16), and that their 'right' (i.e., their lost independence) passes unnoticed by him. Similar complaints betokening a weakness of faith in God's providence occur in xlix. 14, Job xxvii. 2.

<sup>28</sup> The prophet's reply. Note the accumulation of Divine titles—'so many shields against despair' (Hengstenberg). — An everlasting God His covenant therefore is irreversible. The prophet had said as much in v. 8, but felt that it needed to be enforced. Perhaps, too, he alludes to the meaning of Jehovah. The idea of the Divine everlastingness is one of the primary notes of this prophecy. —

The ends of the earth i.e., the whole earth from end to end. Babylonia, then, the seat of the exile of the Jews, is not beyond Jehovah's empire, as if he were only 'the god of the hills' of Palestine. — He fainteth not

As some of the Jews seem to have imagined in their naïve, unspiritual view of God. Sept. renders 'he will not hunger,' and in fact the word sometimes means faintness from want of food, e.g., Judg. viii. 15. The Jews may have thought that their God missed the fat of their sacrifices (comp. xliii. 24). The Biblical narratives on the other hand are full of suggestive hints that Jehovah has no human infirmities, but works for His world both by day and by night. Thus each creative act occupies the whole of the twenty-four hours (Gen. i. 5, &c.), and Jehovah goes before His people in the wilderness night and day (Ex. xiii. 21). Comp. 1 Kings viii. 29, Ps. cxxi. 4. — There is no searching . . . ] Consequently he must have had good reason for delaying the redemption of his people. The all-wisdom of God is a favourite idea of Job, though the phrase here used only occurs in Job v. 9, ix. 10, but comp. xxxiv. 24, xxxvi. 26; God's 'understanding' is spoken of in Job xii. 13, xxvi. 12. What strange contrasts there are in the religious views of members of the same nation! (see last note.)

only to 'wait for Jehovah,' i.e., to believe in him, to become younger and stronger than ever.

<sup>30, 31</sup> The form reminds us of Ps. xxxiv. 10 (11).—They shall put forth . . . ] 'Thou shalt renew thy youth as the eagle,' says 'the oldest commentator on this passage,' himself a psalmist (Ps. ciii. 5). It is an allusion to the popular belief of the ancients that the eagle moults in his old age, and renews his feathers.

CHAPTER XLI.

Contents.—The Nations summoned to defend their idolatry by argument (vv. 1-4); the moral effect of the victories of Cyrus upon them described (vv. 5-7); a contrast between Israel's apparent weakness and real strength in Jehovah (vv. 8-20); the claim to foreknowledge of the idol-gods considered and dismissed.

<sup>1</sup> Come silently unto me, O countries, and let the peoples gather fresh force : let them approach, then let them speak ; together let us draw near to judgment. <sup>2</sup> Who hath stirred up from the sun-rising (the man) whom Righteousness <sup>a</sup> calleth to follow him <sup>a</sup>: (and) giveth up before him peoples, and

<sup>1-4</sup> Jehovah is the speaker. The tribunal appealed to is that of reason, comp. v. 3 ; the question to be decided, Who has the best claim to be God, Jehovah or the idol-gods of the Gentiles.—Countries] See on xl. 15.—Gather fresh force] Same expression in xl. 31 of believers in the true God. Here it sounds rather strangely. Perhaps it is meant ironically, the 'force' of the idolaters being utter weakness, as, in v. 21, they are bidden to produce their 'bulwarks.'

Cyrus is, to the prophet, the minister of God's righteousness, and God's righteousness means generally in the Old Testament His fidelity to covenant engagements, to His promises, and to His threatenings (see on xlii. 6). This close relation between Cyrus and Jehovah is one of the fundamental ideas of II. Isaiah. Again and again we are told that this Persian king was called 'in righteousness' (xlii. 6, xlv. 13). It is only a slight variation to say (as the prophet does here) that righteousness called Cyrus to follow him. So too in lviii 8 we read that Israel's righteousness (i.e., the deliverance which i the fruit of God's righteousness) shall go before him; comp. also Ps. lxxxv. 13 (14). If any further justification of the above rendering be necessary, let it be xlv. 2, where the mention of Cyrus's successes is preceded by the words, 'I (Jehovah) will go before thee.' [I see that this is De Dieu's explanation, Animadversiones in V. T., Lugd. Bat. 1648, pp. 532-3. No other seems to me reconcileable with usage, at any rate so far as Pragm is concerned, which always implies following; see, e.g., Gen. xxx. 30, 1 Sam. xxv. 42, Hab. iii. 5, Job xviii. 11. So too, I see, thinks Dr. Weir, though he prefers rendering 'whom he (God) calleth in righteousness to follow him'; so too Krüger, p. 41, n. 1. Comp. Sept. Vulg.]—Like dust their sword . . . i.e., incapable of even a passive resistance, comp. Job xli. 26-29 (A. V.). Alt. read. applies the figures to the rapidity of Cyrus's victories, for which comp. Lenormant, Ancient History, bk. v. ch. 5. It is, however, not a very natural rend. of the traditional reading, and Ew. rightly follows LXX. Dr. Weir too inclines to this view. Against the ancient reference (see Targ.) of this passage to the call of Abraham and the victory in Gen. xiv., Ibn Ezra, Vitruv., and Dr. Kay have each well argued.

to boast of the trackless paths which they had traversed (see on xxxvii. 24). This explanation will suit any of the above renderings. The version adopted will also bear another meaning, viz. that Cyrus passes along the road so quickly that his footsteps are as it were invisible. So in xlv. 11 he is called an eagle or vulture; and so in Dan. viii. 5 (referred to by Ew.) the typical he-goat 'touched not the ground.'—Both the alt. rends. require us to take the last imperfect in a different sense from the preceding ones, and are therefore less natural than that in the text.—Dr. Weir's alt. rend. is also given by Hahn.

<sup>4</sup> Who hath produced . . . ] Which of the supposed gods can have raised up this mighty conqueror? Surely not those gods whose worshippers he has come to overthrow? Who, but he who summoned into being the generations of the vanished past and of the vanishing present—he who preceded them all, and who will be still the same self-existent One in the ages to come? 'The first and with the last'; repeated with but slight difference in xlv. 6 (see note), and xlviii. 12. It is an unfolding of the sense attached by the prophets to the name Jehovah; comp. Mal. iii. 6.—I am He] 'He' is here used with emphasis almost as a title of God, as it is indeed in later Hebrew (in which 'I' is also thus used), and in the Korán. The statement, 'I am He,' predicates of Jehovah that he alone is lord and master (cf. αὐτός in Αὐτός ὁ Θεός), and

Vz. 8-13. How different the condition of Israel, i.e., of the faithful kernel of the nation, the spiritual Israel ! The prophet vainly endeavours to express the intimacy between it (or rather him) and Jehovah. Note the accumulation of titles. First of all, Israel is My Servant. The full meaning of this title will appear later, when the functions of the Servant have to be explained (see on xlii. 1). Here the emphasis is laid on what God does for Israel, not on what Israel does for God. Jehovah speaks in the character of a friend rather than of a master, a friend superior in power as in dignity, and bound to his humble associate not only by the tie of compassion, but by memories of the past. For Israel is not only a 'servant,' but The seed of Abraham that loved me. The addition of this title ('that loved me') to the name of Abraham is far from otiose. It conveys a reminder to the Jews that they themselves had come very far short of their ideal, but at the same time inspires a well-grounded hope that Abraham's 'love' will call forth the Divine mercy towards his seed. The choice of it is characteristic of a prophetic writer, who throughout his work gives such a large scope to the affections. Not that it is a weak, nerveless feeling which is here intended ; it is a love which is also obedience—for it is alone self-existent, though his nature be incapable of verbal definition. It occurs again in xliii. 10, 13, xlv. 4, xlviii. 12, Deut. xxxii. 39, Ps. cii. 28 (comp. Rev. i. 11, &c.). The last passage deserves special attention, as the psalm in which it occurs is evidently written by one who deeply loved and studied II. Isaiah. It runs :—

But thou art He, and thy years will not come to an end.

In all the passages in which this expression occurs, Sept. renders ἐγὼ εἰμὶ (except Ps. l.c. where ὁ θεὸς αὐτὸς εἶ), which at once suggests that the ἐγὼ εἰμὶ in John xviii. 5 is intended in the same sense—a view confirmed by the supernatural effect of the sounds described in v. 6. Comp. also

(Young's Night Thoughts, Bk. iv.)

<sup>5-7</sup> We should here expect the result of Jehovah's command in v. 1. But the trial-scene is postponed to v. 21. What follows arises out of the news of Cyrus's expeditions. The emergency being so great, the (Western Asiatic) nations 'employ their carpenters and goldsmiths to make a particularly good and strong set of gods' (Sir E. Strachey). A vivid description is given of the life in the idol-manufactories (comp. xl. 19, 20). The last feature is 'to see that this excellent idol be made fast, or it might perchance fall' (Dr. Kay)—a fatal omen for its worshippers.

me ; <sup>9</sup> thou whom I have fetched from the ends of the earth, and from its outlying parts have called, and I said to thee, Thou art my servant, I have chosen and not rejected thee ; <sup>10</sup> Fear not, for I am with thee ; stare not (in thy dread), for I am thy God ; I <sup>11</sup> have fixed my choice upon <sup>12</sup> thee, I also help thee, I also uphold thee with my right hand of righteousness. <sup>13</sup> Behold ! ashamed and confounded shall be all those that were enraged against thee ; they shall become as nought and shall perish—the men of thy strife. <sup>14</sup> Thou shalt seek them, but shalt not find them—the men of thy contention ; they shall become as nought, and as nothingness—the men of thy warfare. <sup>15</sup> For I, Jehovah thy God, hold fast thy right hand ; I who say unto thee, Fear not, I do help thee.

'the fulfilling of the law,' and gratitude,—'because he first loved us.' These qualifications must be remembered ; they doubtless lay in the background of the prophet's thoughts. Still the most important idea in this part of the revelation is that Abraham was not merely passively but actively Jehovah's friend, not merely his beloved, but (literally) his lover. Vitringa, who would unite both meanings, and Dr. Weir, who takes the former by itself (see crit. note), both destroy the fine proportions of the idea.—The title here given to Abraham seems to have taken a firm hold of the prophet's readers. We find it again in 2 Chron. xx. 7, comp. James ii. 23, and it is still in use among the Arabs, who call Abraham khatti ullah 'friend of Allah,' or simply khatti.—Whom I have chosen.] 'For the gifts and calling of God are irrevocable' (Rom. xi. 29, Alford). The Divine election of Israel is a prominent idea in II. Isaiah ; see especially xliii. 10, xliv. 1, xlix. 7.

* So Del., Naeg.—Strengthen, Ges., Ew., Kay.

<sup>9</sup> The ends of the earth . . . ] The expression is vague. Any rather remote country might be so called in rhetorical language. In Thucydides, the king of the Persians is said to have come to Greece 'from the ends of the earth' (Thucyd. i. 69), and a Spartan speaks of Attica as a distant land (Thucyd. i. 80, referred to by Seinecke). The prophet may possibly therefore intend Egypt—the starting-point of the national history of Israel (comp. Hos. xi. 1). But the mention of Abraham rather suggests Mesopotamia (see also on xl. 28). Throughout II. Isaiah the point of view shifts from Babylon to Palestine. The prophet had planted himself in Palestine in the opening chapter (xl. 9), and there he for the present remains.

<sup>10</sup> The consequences of Israel's election in Abraham. On his part, freedom from anxiety ; on his enemies' part, complete destruction. —Have fixed my choice upon thee] In xxxv. 3 the verb means 'strengthen,' but in xliv. 14 the sense of 'choose' seems made out, and this meaning is the more suitable one here, as it gives the exhortation to fearlessness a more positive, historical basis.

<sup>11</sup> The men of thy strife] i.e., they who strove with thee. The indignation of the speaker shows itself in his quadruple reference to vv. 14-16. Not only shall Israel not be overcome ; it shall itself, by God's help, overcome its foes. A fine touch is lost in the English here. In the Hebrew of vv. 14, 15a Israel is addressed in the feminine gender, as a weak and suffering woman. It was not so in the preceding verses, and in v. 15b the prophet significantly reverts to the masculine. All pride must first be humbled, and then the prophecies can take effect.

<sup>15</sup> This weakest of the nations shall become a power against which nothing can stand. The figure in which this is expressed belongs, like lxiii. 1-6, rather to the pre-evangelical period (taking our prophecy as on the whole the earliest Evangelium), and contrasts at first sight with xlvi. 2, 3. But the truth is, that while both the contrasting passages relate to the Servant, the one refers to him as Israel, the other as the branch which is one day to spring out of and to transform Israel. In the interval, the prediction of the violently-obtained successes of the Israelites might well be fulfilled. History tells us that it was so, in a slight degree, in the Maccabean war (comp. Ps. cxlix. 7-9) ; and if only in a slight degree, the causes are too obvious to need mention. The essence of the prediction, however, is that Israel (i.e., the people of the Jews) in the strength of Jehovah shall overcome all the obstacles to the fulfilment of his destiny. — A threshing-roller . . . double-edged] For the application of the figure to success in war, see Mic. iv. 13. vv. 17-20. A picture of the past misery of the Jews and their blissful future (see on xl. 11). The dreary interval of the Exile seemed to pious Israelites like 'dwelling in the tents of Kedar.' The principle of life, viz., God's presence consciously experienced, was absent, and each felt with the Psalmist (who speaks not in his own name, but in that of the Jewish Church), 'My soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, in a dry and weary land, without water' (Ps. lxiii. 1).<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> A golden psalm ! That David is not its author seems to be clear from v. 11, not to mention other reasons depending on exegesis. It is probably contemporary with Ps. lxi., which, if we may press the phrase 'from the end of the earth (I cry unto

<sup>17</sup> The afflicted and the poor . . . ] It is an exclamation: the prophet presents his general impression of the Exile in a pictorial form. With all the compensations of life in a flourishing commercial empire, sojourn in a heathen land appeared to pious Israelites like a wandering in the desert. The 'afflicted and the poor' are the whole nation, all of which, whether consciously or unconsciously, had suffered both from its spiritual and political privations. Coelesyria is still called the Bek'a (= bik'ah, the word employed here). Comp. xl. 4.

<sup>19</sup> The eyes of the Jews shall be gladdened with a 'paradise' or park of stately and shady trees. The list of trees is eclectic; they were probably not quite all natives of Palestine.—The myrtle] The mention of this tree is important with regard to the question of the authorship of these chapters; for, putting aside this prophecy, the myrtle is only referred to in books certainly written after the Captivity (Neh. viii. 15, Zech. i. 8, 10, 11, comp. the proper name Hadassah, Esth. ii. 7). Its home is the mountainous region of the farther Asiatic steppes.<sup>3</sup>

repose a lasting and exclusive faith in Jehovah.

<sup>21</sup> The prophet returns to the judgment-scene so suggestively sketched in vv. 1-4. Jehovah is the speaker ; he addresses, not this time the idolaters, who are too frightened to speak, but the idol-gods themselves. The scene reminds us of Elijah's challenge to the priests of Baal (1 Kings xviii. 21, Naeg.).—Your bulwarks i.e., your arguments. The verbal stem is used in the Mishna of legal disputes ; Job, too, uses a similar phrase of the special pleading of his friends. 'Your intrenchments are intrenchments of clay,' Job xiii. 12.—The King of Jacob In opposition to the 'Kings' or patron-gods of the heathen.

<sup>22</sup> The subject on which the idol-gods are to be heard is their possession of supernatural knowledge of the future. Si sit divinatio, dii sunt (Cicero). Jehovah openly identifies himself with his worshippers—the King with his people ; hence, Let them . . . announce unto us (so xliiii. 9) what shall happen. This expression, 'announce' (i.e., predict), seems to me to determine the sense of the next phrase, which has been much disputed. The former things . . . do ye announce, can only mean, Predict, if ye can, the things which are to take place before certain other events ('the things that are to come hereafter,' v. 23), in other words, the near as opposed to the distant future (so Vittr., Stier, Hahn, Del.). The idol-gods are summoned to do this accurately and precisely ; they are to state what they (the former things) are ; in order that, when the time comes, those who are interested in them may observe whether they have turned out false or true (take notice of their issue).—The difficulties of expositors have been mainly caused by the different senses in which the phrase 'former things' is used in this prophecy. In xliiii. 9 it means events which have been predicted in former times. In xlii. 9 (with the article), xliiii. 18, xlviii. 3, it means former events, with an expressed contrast, in the first two passages, to a new series of events, just coming into the foreground. Ewald adopts the first of these senses. 'The heathen, together with their gods, are called upon,' he says, ' . . . to declare that which they had in former times prophesied . . . and which is now being fulfilled.' (So Hengstenberg, Hitzig, Henderson, Alexander.) But the article, which is expressed in the Hebrew, is against this view, and so, it seems to me, is the context. Besides, how easy was it to answer such a call plausibly by reference to the Babylonian divination ! Calvin prefers the second sense. 'Sic ergo argumentatur : Si quæ colitis idola, sunt dii, oportet ipsos scire et posse omnia. Atqui nihil possunt, neque in prosperis, neque in adversis : neque præterita, neque futura tenent : ergo non sunt dii.' So too Naeg. 'The prophet presupposes that the future can be predicted directly and indirectly ; as, for instance, it is all one whether I say, The fruits of this tree will be apples, or, These roots are those of an apple-tree.' On this theory, Jehovah gives a choice to the idol-gods, either to declare the roots of the future in the past, or to give a direct prediction of the future. God alone can reveal the secrets of the past. If the idols can do this, they are Jehovah's equals, and may be trusted for their ability to predict the future. This is very subtle, but hardly consistent with the context.

what they are, do ye announce, that we may reflect on them and take notice of their issue ; or else the future things do ye declare unto us. <sup>23</sup> Announce ye the things that are to come hereafter, that we may take notice that ye are gods ; yea, do good and do evil, that we may at once stare (in amazement) and behold it. <sup>24</sup> Behold ! ye are of nought, and your doing is of nothingness : an abomination is he who chooseth you.

<sup>23</sup> Yea, do good and do evil] (The Hebrew writer puts the two alternatives in juxtaposition—'do good, and (if ye will) do evil'—where we should rather disjoin them.) The Divine speaker waives the question of foreknowledge, and makes the least requirement possible. 'Prove that you are alive, by performing some act whether good (for your friends) or bad (for your foes).'<sup>1</sup>—Or, we may empty the terms 'good' and 'evil' of their moral meaning, and suppose them to be used proverbially, 'to express the one simple notion of anything, exactly as the two words "right and left" merely conveyed the idea of anywhere (Num. xx. 17, xxii. 26, Deut. ii. 27, Jon. iv. 11).'<sup>2</sup> In favour of this view, see Gen. xxxi. 24, Num. xxiv. 13 (in which passages, however, the form of expression is not the same<sup>3</sup> as here), and especially Lev. v. 4.—Ewald's explanation, 'Prophecy something, good or bad,' i.e. (as Dr. Weir, who holds the same view, puts it) 'the good or evil that is to be evolved in providence,' does not seem to me to suit the context, which requires a more distinct abatement in the Divine demands.

in favour of Jehovah's claims. It was he who raised up Cyrus ; none of the idols predicted Cyrus's coming ; it is he too who gives to Zion the first tidings of the deliverance of her sons.—From the north . . . ] Alluding to the union under Cyrus of Media and Persia, the former of which was northward, the latter eastward of Babylonia.—One who shall proclaim my name] Whichever rend. we adopt of this passage, it is evidently a prediction of a spiritual change to be wrought in Cyrus in consequence of his wonderful career. Light is thrown upon it by a later prophecy, xlv. 3-7, and by the historical statement in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 23 (= Ezra i. 2), which the most sceptical critic will at least admit as an early interpretation of the prophecy before us. It hence appears that the change in Cyrus, anticipated with such profound conviction, was his conversion to the belief that Jehovah was the author of his success, the only true God. Such a change was a necessary link in the chain of providential events working out Jehovah's purposes ; for, until Cyrus was in some sense a brother of the Jews in faith, he could not heartily adopt their national interests. What the prophet foretells is, not a sudden and violent conversion, but simply that Cyrus shall become conscious of his original religious affinity to the

<sup>2</sup> Not, that is, any part of Hifil. Del. quotes Zeph. i. 12, Jer. x. 5, where the verbs are in Hifil. But, as Dr. Weir remarks, 'Even in these passages there is no reason for departing from the more strict meaning of the words, They can neither bestow blessings, nor inflict injuries.'

Jews, and shall act upon that consciousness. We need only assume in the author a very elementary knowledge of the religion and policy of the Persians, such as (1) that they were monotheists (see on xiv. 7), and (2) that they went upon their conquering march (like the Assyrians in ancient and the Mohammedans in modern times) partly as religious missionaries. It was quite in the spirit of the evangelical religion of both Testaments to maintain that this monotheistic worship was genuine, however unconscious, worship of the True God. 'For,' in the language of a later prophet, 'from the rising of the sun even unto the going down thereof, my name is great among the nations, and in every place incense is offered unto my name, and a pure oblation: for my name is great among the nations, saith Jehovah Sabáoth;' <sup>1</sup> and, in words attributed to St. Peter, 'In every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him.' <sup>2</sup> (I have adopted the rend. 'proclaim,' because it implies a somewhat less complete recognition of the True God than the other version—a recognition, in fact, like that of Nebuchadnezzar and Darius (according to Dan iv. 34-37, vi. 25-27), rather than of a Jewish proselyte, though this, no

<sup>26</sup> High officers] The rend. 'viceroys' (1st ed.) is too definite, and does not suit all the passages in which the word occurs (see Ezra ix. 2, Neh. ii. 16 &c.). The word sagan is of great interest, as it can only have come into Hebrew from Babylonia. It is the Hebraised form of a Babylonian title for a high officer (see crit. note on xxii. 15). Its long history closes in Dryden's 'Absalom and Achitophel':—

With him the Sagan of Jerusalem,
Of hospitable soul and noble stem.

<sup>26</sup> Who announced it . . .] 'Announced' = predicted (as constantly in II. Isaiah). The speakers are Jehovah and his worshippers; they place themselves in imagination at the time of the fulfilment of the prediction, when this question will naturally be asked (Naeg.).—From the beginning] i.e., with reference to the period culminating in the career of Cyrus.

Zion, (saying,) Behold, behold them, and unto Jerusalem a bearer of good tidings I give.<sup>1</sup> <sup>28</sup> But though I look, there is no one, and (though I seek) among these, there is no counsellor, that I may ask them, and they may give an answer. <sup>29</sup> Behold! they are all vanity; nothingness are their works; wind and Chaos are their molten images.

I take the word rendered 'fore-runner' (literally, 'first one') as parallel to and synonymous with 'a bearer of good tidings' in the second clause and the words, 'Behold, behold them,' as referring to the return of the Jewish exiles. Perhaps the best commentary on the passage is lii. 7-12, where the same 'bearer of good tidings' is introduced in close connection with the return of Jehovah to Zion at the head of his people. In plain prose the prophet would have written thus, 'I give unto Zion a forerunner and a bearer of good tidings, saying Behold, behold thy sons' (comp. lx. 4). We have thus both a transposition and an omission; and a precisely parallel passage, as far as idiom goes, occurs in Ps. xci. 9, where the first member of the verse runs thus, 'Because thou, Jehovah is my refuge,' and the second, 'Hast made the Most High thy habitation,' so that we have to transpose, in thought, the verb and its object from the second clause into the first, and before 'Jehovah is my refuge,' to supply 'saying.'<sup>1</sup> For the omission of the latter word, comp. also xiv. 8, 1 Kings i. 17, &c.; and for the breaking up of one clause into two rhythmical lines, see crit. note on iii. 12.—A few words as to the other commentators. Ges. and Del. render '(I) first (said) unto Zion, Behold, behold them (i.e., behold the promised blessings), and gave unto Jerusalem a bearer (or, bearers) of good tidings.' De Dieu, preferably, as it seems to me, supposes a transposition, and renders, 'Primus ego dabo Sioni et Hierosolymis lætè annunciantem, Ecce, ecce illa;' so Vitringa and (substantially) Ewald. Naeg., whose work appeared after the above was written, approaches the interpretation here adopted, grammatically at least. He makes 'the first' (rishōn), i.e., as he explains it, 'the beginner' (of Israel's redemption), the object to the verb in the second line, but refers it and the parallel phrase 'bearer of good tidings,' to Cyrus. 'Behold, behold them!' becomes the exclamation of the prophet, foreseeing the happy consequences of Cyrus's mission. He rightly objects to Del.'s view, that Jehovah was not merely the first but the only source of prophecy, and that we have no right to explain 'first' as if it meant alone. But his own proposal is hardly an improvement as regards the sense. The context is entirely taken up with the subject of prophecy, and how can Cyrus, himself Jehovah's 'Anointed One,' be his own herald (m'bhassēr)?

<sup>29</sup> With a final word of scorn the idolaters are dismissed; their boasted Palladia are but wind and Chaos' (see on xl. 17).—Works i.e., idols, as lvii. 12 (comp. i. 31). Ezek. vi. 6.

CHAPTER XLII.

Contents.—The prophet first describes the functions of the Servant of Jehovah (vv. 1-7); then, after two verses of transition (vv. 8, 9), he becomes jubilant at the liberation of the Jews, realized by faith as actual (vv. 10-17); at last, he returns to the present, and details the obstacles to the Divine manifestation of mercy (vv. 18-25).

<sup>1</sup> Behold! my servant] 'Behold' invites the attention of the world—both of the Jews and of the Nations—to a new revelation. The Servant of Jehovah was first mentioned in xli. 8-10, but so cursorily as only to heighten our curiosity. All that we learn from that passage is that the people of Israel is, in virtue of the call of Abraham, Jehovah's Servant, and (see xli. 16) that his destiny is to subdue mighty nations, and to make his boast in Jehovah. This implies that Israel has not yet gloried in his God as he ought to have done,—an inference which may also be drawn from the statement (xli. 9) that Jehovah has not (as might have been expected) rejected Israel. But our knowledge is as yet very vague and incomplete. In the present magnificently sketched prophecy, the functions of the Servant are more fully described, though the seer does but propound fresh riddles to the interpreter. How, in short, can the description here given of the Servant be reconciled with the address to the Servant as Israel in xli. 8?—Some critics cut the knot by supposing that the prophetic writer hesitates between different conceptions of the Servant. Others, making the less sublime passages govern the more, take the Servant to be throughout a collective. But though it must be admitted that 'Servant of Jehovah' in Jeremiah (xxx. 10, xli. 27, 28) and Ezekiel (xxxvii. 25) is merely a title for the Chosen People,<sup>1</sup> this is no reason why another prophet should not have given the phrase a deeper meaning. In the sublimest descriptions of the Servant I am unable to resist the impression that we have a presentiment of an individual, and venture to think that our general view of 'the Servant' ought to be ruled by those passages in which the enthusiasm of the author is at its height. 'Servant of Jehovah' in these passages seems about equivalent to 'Son of Jehovah' in Ps. ii. 7 ('son' and 'servant' being in fact nearly equivalent in the Old Testament<sup>2</sup>), viz. the personal instrument of Israel's regeneration, or, as we may say in the broader sense of the word, the Messiah. This theory seems to be confirmed by certain remarkable phenomena of the Book of Psalms. There, as in II. Isaiah, there are some passages which emphasize the royal aspect of this human and yet (if we do justice to their language) superhuman Person, and others which exhibit Him more particularly, as it is at any rate allowable to read them, in His prophetic (see Ps. xxii.), and (see Ps. xc.) in His priestly aspect. A comparative shall cause the law to go forth to the nations. <sup>2</sup> He shall not cry nor clamour, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street ;

study of these two books has led me to substantially the same view as Oehler and Delitzsch, and which has been thus metaphorically described by the latter : ' The conception of the Servant of Jehovah is, as it were, a pyramid, of which the base is the people of Israel as a whole, the central part Israel "according to the Spirit," and the summit the person of the mediator of salvation who arises out of Israel.' <sup>1</sup> To theological system, indeed, the prophet was entirely a stranger, but he had formed a conception of a future 'Israelite indeed,' so increasingly real and vivid as to have suggested that some features of the description (chap. liii.) were borrowed from the life of an eminent prophet.<sup>3</sup> But we cannot consistently stop short there. If there are individualising features in chap. liii., which cannot be explained from the personification of the Jewish people, this is hardly less true of the passage in chap. xlii., on which we are now entering.—There are two phraseological points of contact between this description and the passage in chap. xli. : 'mine elect (or, chosen),' comp. 'I have chosen thee' (xli. 8) ; 'whom I uphold,' comp. 'yea, I uphold thee' (xli. 10). (See Essay IV., vol. ii.) —Mine elect] A favourite word in II. Isaiah (occurring six times) ; found also in Ps. lxxxix. 3 and (including plurals) in Ps. cv. 6, 43, cvi. 5, 23. Ps. lxxxix. a semi-Messianic psalm, may have been written before the Exile ; Ps. cv., cvi. are generally admitted to be post-Exile works.—I have put my spirit . . .] In a special sense, for a high and arduous office (comp. on lxi. 1).—Cause . . . to go forth] i.e. (1) from its Divine source (li. 4) ; or (2) from Jerusalem (ii. 3) ; or (3) from its obscurity (Ps. xxxvii. 6). (1) and (3) may be combined ; (2) belongs most naturally to the theory that 'the Servant' = the people of Israel.—The law] i.e., 'the law of God, the religion of Jehovah' (Ges.) ; 'the true religion regarded from its practical side, . . . religion' as an ordering of life, vómos (Del.). All religions claim to be 'laws' ; the distinction of Biblical religion is that it dwells with increasing earnestness on the moral as opposed to the merely ritual law. The same word (mishpāt) is used of mere religious observances, like θρησκεία, in 2 Kings xvii. 26–28 ; contrast its spiritual use here and in Jer. v. 4, viii. 7. The corresponding word in Arabic (dīn) means : 1. obedience, 2. a religion, 3. a statute or ordinance, 4. a system of usages, rites, and ceremonies (Lane, s. v. dīn). In the Korán (Sur. ii. 126) and elsewhere dīn Ibrahim means the pre-Mohammedan monotheism.—To the nations] The prominence given to the Servant's activity among the heathen is explained by the context. Israel's turn comes later (but see v. 7).

<sup>a</sup> a crushed reed he shall not break, and a dimly burning wick he shall not quench; <sup>b</sup> truthfully shall he cause the law to go forth. <sup>c</sup> He shall not burn dimly, neither shall his spirit be crushed,<sup>c</sup> till he shall have set the law in the earth, and for his teaching the countries wait.

3, with the destructive agency (not without a Divine sanction) of conquerors like Cyrus. It is implied that he might, if he would, enforce obedience; but that, in his Divine humility ('andvakh, Ps. xviii. 36), he waives his right, and limits himself to persuasion.—Dr. Weir wrongly regards v. 2 as an anticipation of chap. liii. 'The verse seems to express patient submission: çd'ak necessarily implies distress. The Servant makes no public demonstrations of anguish: in silence he waits upon God.' This is against the context, which implies that there is no serious impediment to his mission; moreover, the use of çd'ak in some of the verbal forms is wider than Dr. Weir admits.<sup>1</sup>

(comp. Matt. ix. 13). He will carefully tend them ('not break' is a litotes) with the pure and wholesome medicine of God's 'law.'—Truthfully More literally, 'according to the standard of truth' (same idiom as xxxii. 1). There shall be no abatement, no compromise, in his exhibition of the objective truth. A contrast may be implied to 'the splendid falsehoods of heathenism' (Hitz.). For alt. rend., comp. xxxiii. 6, xxxix. 8.

<sup>4</sup> He shall not burn dimly, &c. So, excellently, Dr. Kay. The phraseology suggests that the Divine envoy is himself a lamp and a reed; in fact, both emblems are suitable. He is a reed, not such as Pascal, in his definition of man, but such as Dante describes, humble but not to be broken, and able to cleanse all stains (Purgatorio, i. 94-136); and he is also a light of the nations (v. 6).—Till he shall have set . . . He shall have one absorbing interest—the final establishment (li. 4) of the true religion. The same concentration, it cannot but be remarked, stands in place of what we call 'character' to the Messiah who fulfils this prophecy.—Teaching See on i. 10.—The countries Synonymous with 'the nations.'—Wait i.e., longingly. Frequently used with Jehovah (e.g. Ps. xxxi. 24 A. V. 'hope'), or some gift of Jehovah (Ps. cxix. 43, 74, xxxiii. 18 Weir) for the object.

sion of the Servant with greater precision. Notice the solemnity of the expressions with which it is introduced and closed. The plan of that mission (such is the underlying thought of v. 5) requires an exhibition of the Divine power and wisdom on as large a scale as in creation and preservation. Comp. Zech. xii. 1, which seems to me a reminiscence of our passage.—

The God] i.e., the true God, in opposition to the idol-gods (v. 8). The phrase 'the God, Jehovah,' only occurs again Ps. lxxxv. 9.—Have called thee in righteousness] 'In accordance with my revealed purpose that Israel should be my people, and that all nations should acknowledge me for their God.' 'Righteousness,' from the prophetic point of view, is measured with regard to the Divine covenant with Israel. Yet where the limitation to Israel is so plainly broken through, the meaning approaches that which I find thus expressed in Stier, 'the righteousness of the Creator towards his fallen creature, which prepares salvation, and calls the mediator of salvation.' Only we must not continue in the 'kaleidoscopic' manner of Stier, 'and appoints him to set up and impart a new righteousness,' for shortly after Cyrus is addressed in the very same terms (xlv. 13).—Will keep thee] Not 'will form thee,' for the Servant has been 'formed' or predestinated from eternity (obs. the perfect in xlv. 21). For a covenant of the people] 'The people' might be taken for 'the human race,' as in v. 5; but xlix. 8, where the whole phrase occurs again, limits the reference to Israel. 'A covenant of the people' means 'the medium or mediator of a covenant between Jehovah and Israel.' As the Servant is called 'a light' in person, so he can be called 'a covenant' in person. Analogies elsewhere are not wanting. Thus in xlix. 6 the same Divine representative is called 'my Salvation'; in Mic. v. 5 (4) the Messiah of prophecy is designated emphatically 'Peace'; and in John xi. 25 the Messiah of history claims the speaking title, 'the Resurrection and the Life.' So, too, in Mal. iii. 1, the 'angel of the covenant' is mentioned, i.e., the angel who is to actualise, as it were, the covenant-relation of Jehovah to Israel. In all these cases persons are mentioned as embodying or representing, and not merely symbolising, certain spiritual gifts or relations; and such clear parallels dispense us from the obligation of discussing the meaning of disputed passages such as Gen. xvii. 10, 'This is my covenant,' or Luke xxii. 20, 'This cup is the new covenant.'—To critics who deny the personal reference of 'the Servant,' the phrase presents no slight difficulty. Ewald and Hitzig regard the second noun as qualifying the first, so that 'a covenant of a people' = a covenant-people; comp. 'a wonder of a counsellor' = a wonderful counsellor, ix. 5, 'a wild ass of a man' = a wild man, Gen. xvi. 12. The idea expressed in this rendering is unexceptionable (see lxi. 6, and comp. Rom. xi. 15), but the view of the construction is directly opposed to the parallelism. Knobel explains the phrase by Volksbund, i.e., 'popular league.' The believers in Jehovah, he thinks, formed a kind of association, recognised as such by the unbelieving or indifferent majority, and 'as evidence for this he boldly offers liii. 2! Unfortunately the Hebr. Brith (rendered above

'covenant') nowhere has the sense of 'league,' not even in Dan. xi. 28, referred to by Knobel, for the true meaning of the phrase 'the holy covenant' is the divinely ordained constitution of the Jewish people.<sup>1</sup>

Accepting the above rendering, the question remains, 'Which covenant is referred to? The old covenant of Sinai, or the new and spiritual one described by Jeremiah? (xxx. 31–34). Surely the latter; otherwise why should the Servant be said to be 'called'? Obs., too, that in liv. 10 Jehovah expressly contrasts his present 'covenant of peace,' not indeed with the Sinaitic covenant of Moses, but with that of Noah; and that in lv. 3 an 'everlasting covenant' is spoken of, which is at once new and old (see note).—For a light . . .] The words recur in xlix. 6, comp. li. 4.

<sup>7</sup> To open blind eyes] i.e., that thou mayest open, &c.—The healing of the blind, both in a physical and in a spiritual sense, is one of the chief features of the Messianic age in prophecy; which kind of blindness is meant, the context alone can decide. Here, as in xxix. 18 (but not xxxv. 5), it is spiritual blindness to which the prophecy refers—this is clear from vv. 18–20.

That the promise belongs first to the Jews is also clear from those verses, but the Gentiles are of course included (comp. v. 6).—

The house of restraint] The prosaic Knobel understands this literally, in the face of v. 22! It is the prison-house of physical and spiritual trouble which is meant (comp. Ps. cvii. 10, Job xxxvi. 8). The Jews are doubtless foremost in the prophet's mind (v. 22, comp. xlix. 9, lxi. 1).

<sup>8</sup> That is my name] Alluding to the meaning of the name Jehovah, which was at any rate felt to include the unique reality, and power to confer reality, of the Divine Being.—My glory . . .] Were such a God's predictions to fail, He would sink to a lower level than the imaginary deities who have, at any rate, not deluded their worshippers. (So perhaps we may connect the two halves of the verse.)

<sup>9</sup> The former things . . . new things] Here are two cycles of events, the one complete, the other on the point of beginning. Both have been foreknown by Jehovah; and the fulfilment of the earlier predictions is appealed to as a pledge of that of the later. Kimchi understands by the former the prophecies of Isaiah against Sennabehold! they have come, and new things do I announce; before they shoot forth, I tell you of them.

<sup>10</sup> Sing unto Jehovah a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth; 'ye that have gone down upon the sea,' and the fulness thereof; the countries, and the inhabitants thereof. <sup>11</sup> Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages which Kedar inhabiteth; let the inhabitants of Sela shout; from the top of the mountains let them cry aloud; <sup>12</sup> let them render glory to Jehovah, and declare his praise in the countries!

cherib, but the Babylonian period seems more likely than the Assyrian to be referred to. We must remember that the real or ecstatically adopted point of view of our prophet is at the Babylonian Exile, when such predictions as xxxix. 6, 7, had long been fulfilled. The 'new things' are the same which call forth a burst of song in vv. 10-12—the wonderful deliverance of the Jews, and the glories which shall follow; 'new,' not merely as being later, but as dimming the splendour of all previous achievements (xliii. 18, comp. lxx. 17).—

Before they shoot forth . . . ] An evidence of Jehovah's sole divinity (comp. xlviii. 5). The phrase 'shoot forth' occurs again in a similar connection in xliii. 19; what does it signify? Not that one event 'develops' out of another, but that the 'word' of Jehovah is a seed, which, in virtue of its origin, has a self-realising character (lv. 10, 11). Some 'words' are unheard, save in the heavenly council (Job xv. 8, Q. P. B.), as for instance those spoken before man was formed; others 'he revealeth to his servants the prophets' (Am. iii. 7), and these latter words have an equally self-fulfilling power (ix. 8).

welfare) to Sing unto Jehovah a new song] (Contrast the introductory form in xxvi. 1.) 'A new song' is familiar to us in the Psalter, where it occurs six times; two of the Psalm-passages (Ps. xcvi. 1, xcvi. 1) evidently involve reminiscences of our prophecy. It means generally a song inspired by gratitude for new mercies, but here perhaps it has a fuller content, corresponding to the deeper sense of 'new things' in v. 9 (comp. Rev. xiv. 3).—For a general parallel, see xxiv. 14-16.—Ye that have gone down . . . ] Ye 'that do business on the great waters' (the corresponding phrase in the parallel line, Ps. cvii. 23). But Bishop Lowth's conjecture, well supported in his note on this passage, is highly plausible. A verb as well as a noun seems required for symmetry's sake, and the noun we expect is 'the sea,' i.e., the west.—The fulness thereof] i.e., the fishes (comp. on xxxiv. 1).

<sup>13</sup> Jehovah shall go forth . . . ] This verse gives the reason for the call for a 'new song,' not the gentle ministrations of the Servant, not the irresistible march of Cyrus, but the terrible deeds of the Almighty. It is in effect the Day of Jehovah which is here described; the victories of Cyrus and the fall of Babylon form but one act in that great drama; there is much in the description that follows which can never have been thought to be exhausted by any possible achievements of Cyrus. The Day of Jehovah has two sides, a dark and a bright; the stern work of retribution being over, Jehovah's Servant will step forward, and assume his delightful office of winning hearts.—Will this office be again suspended by the necessity for a fresh interposition of the Almighty? To answer this question would be to systematise where the prophet has left but vague outlines.—For the representation of Jehovah as a warrior see xxviii. 21, xxxi. 4, lix. 16, 17, Zech. ix. 13, 14, xiv. 3. It is another instance of the fearless security with which the prophets use popular phraseology of mythical origin, trusting to the general spirit of their revelation to correct any verbal inaccuracies.—Shall go forth ] Elsewhere a technical phrase for taking the field (see xxxvii. 9, 36), but probably here with an allusion to Jehovah's previous seclusion (see next verse).—A mighty one ] Or, 'a hero.' Comp. Jehovah's title God-Mighty-One, x. 21.

—Jealousy ] See on ix. 7; also for the combination with 'heroism' or active 'might,' lxiii. 15.

<sup>14</sup> But why does the Mighty One need to 'stir up' his slumbering 'jealousy'? He tells us himself.

—I have been silent from of old ] 'To be silent,' when said of God (as lvii. 11, lxii. 1, lxiv. 11), is 'to leave the prayers, spoken or unspoken, of the faithful unanswered;' comp. Ps. xxviii. 1, Hab. i. 13. Jehovah has been thus silent 'for an age' or æon ('ôlām'), a period stretching indefinitely backward. It is the exaggeration of strong emotion (so lvii. 11, comp. lviii. 12, lxi. 4). Still it corresponds to the fact that 'we do not find miracles [or striking providences] sown broadcast over the whole Old Testament history,' but that they 'have reference to certain great epochs and crises of the kingdom of God' (Trench, Miracles, p. 43).—Like a woman in travail . . . ] A figure for unrestrainable impatience, not without a secondary reference to the new birth of Israel and of the world. (Comp. xxvi. 17, 18, lxvi. 8, 9).—At once ] i.e., these signs of anguish shall be unintermittent.

<sup>15, 16</sup> Judgment and redemption side by side. Mountains and hills are symbols of the heathen world in general (not merely Babylonia).—The blind ] Not, I venture to think, 'the spiritually blind' (Del., Naeg.), which hardly suits the context, but 'the perplexed and desponding' (Calv.); there is an exact parallel in lix. 9, 10.—The difficulties of the commentators they knew not ; through paths they have not known will I make them to go ; I will turn darkness into light before them, and rough places into a table-land. These are the things which I will surely do, and I will not let them slip. <sup>17</sup> They shall surely be thrust back ; they shall be utterly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to molten images, Ye are our gods.

arise from not observing that vv. 10-17 are parenthetical (see on v. 18), and were probably introduced by an afterthought. — I will surely do] The tenses are prophetic perfects ; so also the first tense in v. 17.

them back. Comp. for the figure Ps. xxxv. 3, 4, and for the rend. Hupfeld on Ps. vi. 11.—Prof. Birks makes a break at the end of v. 16, connecting v. 17 with v. 18. But this spoils the contrast between the believing blind in v. 16 and the unbelievers in v. 17 (see the same contrast in l. 10, 11), and introduces a premature reference to idolatry into the new paragraph.

vv. 18-20. We are confronted here with an at first sight perplexing discrepancy, viz., that whereas in vv. 1-7 'the Servant' is introduced as an indefatigable worker in Jehovah's cause, and as specially appointed 'to open blind eyes,' in v. 19 we find 'My servant' and 'My messenger' described as spiritually 'blind' and 'deaf.' This, however, is only one of those apparent inconsistencies in which Eastern poets and teachers delight, and which are intended to set us on the search for a higher and reconciling idea. The higher idea in the case before us is that the place of the incompetent messenger shall be taken by one both able and willing to supply his deficiencies and to correct his faults. Israel the people being as yet inadequate to his sublime destiny, Jehovah's own 'elect' shall come to transform and elevate the 'unprofitable servant.'

<sup>18</sup> Hear, ye deaf . . .] Jehovah is the speaker ; he has before him a company of spiritually deaf and blind (see on xliii. 8). Surely (we may suppose him to make this reflection) they are not all stone-deaf ; some may be able by exerting the power yet graciously continued to them to hear God speaking in history and in prophecy (comp. v. 23)!—Thus it would almost seem as if Jehovah himself had assumed the function of 'opening blind eyes' previously ascribed to the Servant. But there is no real discrepancy. The operations of Jehovah and of his Servant are all one ; Jehovah must nominally interpose here in order that the incompetence of his people-Servant may be exposed, and the necessity for another Servant, springing out of but far worthier than Israel, be made clear.

<sup>19</sup> Who is blind but my servant ?] The blind and deaf Servant means the people of Israel regarded as a whole, in its present state of spiritual insensibility,—Jehovah is sometimes described anthropomorphically as 'saying' or, more fully, as 'saying to his heart,' i.e., to whom I <sup>8</sup> send? Who is blind as <sup>h</sup> the surrendered one <sup>h</sup> and <sup>i</sup> deaf as the servant of Jehovah? <sup>20</sup> Thou hast seen many things, but thou observest not; he openeth the ears, and heareth not! <sup>21</sup> It was Jehovah's pleasure for his righteousness' sake to make the instruction great and glorious; <sup>22</sup> and himself (Gen. viii. 21). It is such a 'saying' that we have here. Jehovah sadly reflects, 'Who among earth's inhabitants is so blind and deaf as Israel my Servant?' Strange fact! The servant, who needs a sharp eye to catch the least gesture of his master (Ps. cxxiii. 2)—the messenger, who requires an open ear to receive his commissions, is blind—is deaf!—To interpret 'Who is blind, &c.,' of Jesus Christ, as if 'the guilt and shame of the people [were] here enforced by direct contrast with the true Israel, the Prince who has power with God,' and as if the true no less than the phenomenal Israel could be called blind and deaf, with reference to his slowness to take offence (Prof. Birks), is to go directly counter to Biblical usage.<sup>1</sup> In fact, the only passages quoted in support of this farfetched view are Ps. xxxviii. 13, where the sin-conscious psalmist resigns his defence to God, and John viii. 6-11, where the Saviour (if this interpolated narrative may be followed), under exceptional circumstances, refuses an answer to his persecutors.—Whom I send This alludes, I think, not to the description in vv. 1-8, but to the original commission of Israel, referred to in xli. 8-13. The present tense is used because the character of Jehovah's Servant is indelible (as we have been told already, xli. 9). In spite of Israel's offences, Jehovah still 'sends' and 'will (continue to) send' him. Chap. liii. will throw further light on this.—As the surrendered

one] One might almost say, 'as the Moslem,' for the prophet's word (m'shullām) is closely akin to the Arabic muslim (Moslem), i.e., 'he that devoteth or submitteth himself (to God).' Comp. Emerson: 'A more surrendered soul, more informed and led by God.' Apparently this word became a favourite among the pious Jews in later times. It appears as a proper name in Ezra viii. 16, x. 15, 29, and the fem. Meshullemeth (before the Exile), 2 Kings xxi. 19. Comp. also the frequent expression lebh shalem, 'a perfect (= devoted) heart.'

<sup>21</sup> For his righteousness' sake] In accordance with his declared purpose, Jehovah sent a constant succession of prophetic teachers 'since the day that their fathers went forth from the land of Egypt' (Jer. vii. 25). A stream of self-consistent and divinely inspired instruction struck the outward organ of hearing, but, alas! not the inner ear (v. 20). And yet this 'instruction' was 'great and glorious,' both in its contents and, so far as the course of history had yet gone (see v. 9), in its fulfilment.

—Instruction] Or, teaching. Hebr. tôrâh; see on i. 10.

yet it is a people robbed and plundered ; snared are all of them in holes, and hidden in houses of restraint ; they are become a prey, and there is none to rescue—a spoil, and none that saith, Restore. <sup>23</sup> Who among you will give ear to this, will attend, and be obedient for the time to come ? <sup>24</sup> Who delivered up Jacob for a spoil, and Israel unto robbers ? Was it not Jehovah, he against whom we sinned, and they would not walk in his ways, and were not obedient unto his instruction ? <sup>25</sup> So he poured upon him in fury his anger, and the violence of war, and it set him on fire round about, but he took no notice, and kindled upon him, but he would not lay it to heart.

The prophet, identifying himself with his people (as in lix. 9-13, but scarcely in ch. liii.). Contrast the argument of the unhappy Jewish exiles in Egypt, Jer. xlv. 17-19—a most instructive passage !

<sup>25</sup> Kindled upon him] There is an evident allusion to this passage in xliii. 2, where the same phrase occurs, ‘a striking instance,’ as Dr. Kay well observes, ‘of the double aspect in which Israel is presented in these chapters. The corrupt nation is subjected to the fire of judgment ; but the Israel of God suffers no hurt.’

CHAPTER XLIII.

Contents.—‘All Israel shall be saved.’ Jehovah is the only God ; prophecy is his evidence ; his word none can make void. An example of such an irreversible decree is the fall of Babylon and the restoration of Israel to unimaginable felicity.

indicates that there has been a conflict between Divine love and Divine wrath, and that the former has gained the victory. In fact,

I have called thee by name; mine art thou. <sup>2</sup>When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee,—and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou goest through the fire, thou shalt not be scorched, and the flame shall not kindle upon thee. <sup>3</sup>For I Jehovah am thy God; (I) Israel's Holy One, thy deliverer; for thy ransom do I give Egypt, Ethiopia and Seba in thy stead. <sup>4</sup>Since thou art pre-the wrath of Jehovah was but grieved affection. Its force is now for the time spent (comp. xl. 2); Jehovah will now deliver and protect, reassemble and restore his people.—Thy creator] Israel is a new and singular product, in which special Divine potencies have been at work: therefore 'precious' (v. 4). Among these potencies is affliction, which to the unfaithful Israel is only depressing or even destructive, but to the faithful is an instrument of purification. It is the faithful Israel (in spite of the point of contact in v. 24) to which the following promises belong.—I redeem thee] Lit., 'I have redeemed thee'; i.e., historically, of the past; and prophetically, of the future. Obs., verb and participle occur above twenty times in II. Isaiah.

—Called thee by name] Lit. 'called with thy name,' i.e., proclaimed it. To utter a person's name, in primitive times, might be a grievous injury if the speaker's intention were malicious; it might also be a high distinction, if the speaker were much superior in rank. Comp. Ex. xxxi. 2, xxxiii. 12, 17. Israel was specially honoured, for Jehovah combined his own name with Israel's, calling it 'my people.' It was a kunya (as in the case of Cyrus, xlv. 4).—Mine art thou] Alluding to the Sinaitic covenant (see Ex. xix. 5, 6). On that wonderful spiritualisation of the common primitive idea of a patron-deity, the German

<sup>2</sup> When thou passest through the waters . . .] A glance at the troubles in store for the Babylonian empire, but also at any subsequent ones in which the Jews might be involved. The revelation fuses all these together in one visionary image. The same use of the figures of fire and water occurs in Ps. lxxvi. 12; comp. Dan. iii. 17, 27.—When thou goest through the fire] Comp. on xlii. 25.

<sup>3</sup> For thy ransom do I give Egypt] No price is too great for Israel's redemption; other nations will be sacrificed to attain it.<sup>1</sup>—The passage implies (1) that the judgments which fall upon unbelievers are arranged providentially for the good of Jehovah's chosen ones—in this sense, 'the wicked are a ransom for the righteous' (Prov. xxi. 18, comp. xi. 8); (2) that Jehovah has a personal regard for Cyrus as well as for the Jews, and considers his generosity to the latter (so unlike the conduct of previous conquerors) as worthy of a recompence. History ratified the prophetic word; what Cyrus had planned (Herod. i. 153), Cambyses carried out. A more minutely exact correspondence is not to be required. A literal fulfilment is not the test of a prophet's veracity; and in xlv. 14 another description of the prospects of these nations is given, which it is not easy to reconcile with our

cious in my sight ; art honourable, and I love thee ; therefore will I give men in thy stead, and peoples for thy life. <sup>5</sup> Fear not, for I am with thee ; from the sunrising will I bring thy seed, and from the sunsetting will I gather thee ; <sup>6</sup> I will say to the north, Give up, and to the south, Restrain thou not ; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, <sup>7</sup> every one who is called by my name, and whom for my glory I have produced, have formed, yea, have prepared.

passage. It is clear that the prophet sometimes writes with an eye on the actual political circumstances, and sometimes is wholly absorbed in the glories of an age still future—the Messianic.—[Seba] i.e., the peninsula of Meroe, or N. Ethiopia.

<sup>5, 6</sup> From east and west, north and south, the Israelites are to be gathered to their home. (Parallel passages, xlix. 12, Ps. cvii. 3).—Historically interesting, as proving the wide extent at thus early a date of the Jewish Diaspora (comp. xi. 11, and note). Not only in Babylonia and Assyria, but in the 'far lands' of the Mediterranean, and even perhaps in China (xlix. 12)—one at least of the 'ends of the earth' to the geography of that day, there were bands of Jewish exiles. But the peculiarity of the passage does not so much consist in this, as in the fact that it contains no express mention of Babylonia, where in general the scene of this prophetic drama is laid. It thus supplies a striking evidence of the truth that the scope of a prophecy is not to be confined to a single age or country. These latter chapters of the Book of Isaiah are something more than a private revelation for the exiles in Babylon. Great as are the miseries of the author's real or assumed present, he is not so absorbed by them as to forget the glories in prospect.—Rutgers<sup>1</sup> infers from this passage that chaps. xl.-xli. cannot have been written during the Exile ; otherwise Babylon would, he thinks, have been referred to. The foregoing remarks tend to show that the passage has no bearing whatever on the question of date. Rutgers also refers to xi. 11, as showing that Isaiah had as full a view of the Jewish dispersion as is implied in the verses before us. But this only proves (assuming, as I am willing to do, the genuineness of that passage) that Isaiah might have written these verses, not that he actually did so. Besides, that passage contains one word (Assyria), which to some extent diminishes the value of the comparison. —[Bring my sons . . .] Here the earth as a whole must be addressed. 'Bring' implies the escort of the Gentiles (xlix. 22).—[My daughters] Obs. the kind and even respectful mention of the female sex in Messianic descriptions ; see xi. 12 (note), lx. 4, Joel ii. 28, Gal. iii. 28.

<sup>7</sup> Who is called by my name] i.e., who is Jehovah's servant. 'Israel must live, because the name of Jehovah has been named on him.' Dr. Weir, comparing Matt. xxii. 32. —[Produced . . . formed . . . prepared] The three verbs 'seem to describe the process of formation from the first rough cutting to the perfecting of the work ; comp. xli. 11' (Dr. Weir). The first verb, however, is restricted to the Divine creative operations, whether such as imply a pre-existent material, or such as do not. The blessing of Jacob (Gen. xlix.) shows us how rough was the material out of which the church-nation of Israel was carved.

<sup>9</sup> Another of those mysterious voices, of which we have heard already (xl. 3-8), bursts on the ear. Bring forth a blind people . . . ] The ministers of justice are the persons addressed. Israel, once blind and deaf, but now in possession of sight and hearing, is to be brought into court (see on xli. 1). For what purpose will appear later (v. 10).—Almost all critics explain ‘a blind people that hath eyes,’ as if it were ‘a people that hath eyes and seeth not.’ This, however, is certainly not a natural view of the construction, nor does it harmonise well with the context, for how can a spiritually insensible people be produced as a witness against the heathen nations? Calvin and Ewald seem to be nearer the mark. The former comments thus: ‘Sic educam cæcos, ut visum ipsis restituum; surdos ita liberabo, ut aures recuperent;’ the latter, ‘He will now disengage from their fetters those who in xlii. 7, 18, were called blind and deaf, that they may again receive eyes and ears (as in xlii. 7).’ Both Calvin and Ewald, however (the one virtually, the other avowedly), alter the first word; the former rendering ‘that I may bring out;’ the latter, ‘I will bring out;’ and both failing to see the close connection between this and the next verse. The truth is that this passage is reversely parallel to xlii. 20, where of the actual Israel it is said, that ‘he has seen many things, but observeth not;’ and that ‘he openeth the ears, but heareth not.’ It is to Stier that the credit belongs of restoring its natural sense to this otherwise obscure verse.

<sup>9</sup> All ye nations, assemble yourselves] On the one side, the spiritual Israel, a small company of believers in Jehovah, has already taken its place; a mighty host of heathen nations is now summoned to appear on the other. The question is then put to the latter, Which of their gods can produce predictions such as those in vv. 1-7? To prove that they can, the Divine speaker continues, Let them mention former things, i.e., past events which they have correctly foretold. —Unto us] viz., Jehovah and his servants (as xli. 22). —That they may be justified] In the event of their professing to have foretold events correctly, they must produce witnesses to justify their assertions. —And let them hear and say, It is truth] I do not understand this. The words (or rather the word) put into the mouth of the speakers is more suitable to a judge than either to a defendant or to witnesses. It would be bold to alter the text, but the passage would at once become intelligible, if we might emend the third person into the first (on the analogy of xli. 26), and render ‘and that we may hear, &c.’ The alternative is, with Luther, Ges., and Naeg., to make the subject indefinite (‘dass . . . man höre’); so Dr. Weir, ‘that men may hear.’ But this is not a natural interpretation.

my witnesses, (the oracle of Jehovah,) and my Servant, whom I have chosen, that ye may acknowledge, and believe me, and understand that I am He; before me no God was formed, neither after me shall there be. <sup>11</sup> I, I am Jehovah, and beside me there is no deliverer. <sup>12</sup> I have announced<sup>b</sup> and declared, for there is no stranger among you; and ye they have no witnesses to produce. Meantime Jehovah calls upon his witnesses, viz., his people Israel, which has had abundant proof of his predictive power.—And my Servant] i.e., 'and ye are also my Servant, the chosen instrument of my purposes;' comp. xlv. 1. So Del., Seinecke, Riehm, Naeg., taking the phrase as a second predicate. Others (Vitr., Ges., Hitz., Ew., Stier, Kay) explain, 'and so (or, and so especially) is my Servant,' taking the two latter words as a second subject, and distinguishing the Servant from the people of Israel (at any rate, from the natural Israel). But this is less obvious. The only antithesis suggested by the context is that between Israel and the heathen world (Naeg.).—That ye may acknowledge . . .] It is not only in Jehovah's interest, but in that of his people (the spiritual Israel), that this trial-scene is arranged. The spectacle of the futility of heathenism will confirm their faith in the true God.—I am He] See on xli. 4.—Before me . . .] i.e., as Dr. Alexander well puts it, 'all other gods were made, but none of them was made before I had a being.' There is also an ironical allusion to the incongruity of 'forming' him who is man's 'former' (xlv. 9).—After me] i.e., 'after I (per impossibile) have ceased to exist.'

<sup>12</sup> Prediction the proof of divinity. I have announced . . .] 'What none of the heathen prophets can do (v. 9), I, Jehovah, have performed.'—The text-reading presents great difficulties. Such an inconsistent series of verbs as 'announced—delivered—declared,' can hardly have come from the pen of the prophet. Even if it were conceivable, another objection would remain in force. The subject of the prophesying referred to in v. 9 (comp. xlii. 9) is the restoration of the Jews and the Messianic glories. Neither of these events had as yet taken place. Consequently the middle verb of the series must be practically future, while the first and third are past, which is most unlikely. Bunsen's conjecture is plausible, but less so, in my opinion, than that proposed above. [Dr. Weir follows Stier, explaining 'declared' as = 'proclaimed the deliverance which prophecy had announced.' He supports this by a reference to xlviii. 20. It should be remembered, however, that in nine out of sixteen passages in II. Isaiah the verb hishma'a means 'to prophesy.'—For there is no stranger . . .] 'Stranger' here, as also in Deut. xxxii. 16, is short for 'strange, or foreign, god' (for the phrase in full, see Ps. xlv. 20, lxxi. 9). No God but Jehovah had any power for good or for evil over Israel.—The expression seemingly admits the claims of other gods for other nations, but the prophets sometimes understate their own belief, through adopting popular phraseology. According to our prophet, the idols were 'of the nature of nothing' (xli. 24).—And I am God] This is the inference from all the foregoing facts. 'And' = consequently (as are my witnesses (the oracle of Jehovah), and I am God.

<sup>13</sup> Also from (this) day forth I am He, and there is none that rescueth out of my hand; I work, and who can turn it back?

<sup>13</sup> Also from (this) day forth . . . ] A fresh fact is here mentioned. Jehovah, who had for a time withdrawn Himself, has begun again to manifest Himself; and if He, the unique, the unchangeable one, is at work, the result is certain. —Who can turn it back? ] i.e., who can reverse it? The same phrase occurs in Job ix. 12, xi. 10, xxiii. 13, thus forming another of the numerous affinities between II. Isaiah and Job. In Isa. xiv. 27, where it also occurs, it closes a prophecy; and here too it seems to mark a secondary pause in the discourse.

<sup>14</sup> An example of such a work, which no man can reverse. — For your sake ] i.e., not for Israel's sake as Israel, but as the Servant of Jehovah. — I have sent ] viz., the destined instruments of my vengeance. — And will bring down . . . ] i.e., 'and will bring all of them (viz., the mixed multitude of merchants in Babylon, see on xiii. 14-22), and especially ("and" as in ii. 1) the Chaldeans, down into the ships of their shouting.' The rhythmic structure of the verse obliges the prophet-poet to break up this clause into two. Hence arises some amount of difficulty in the exegesis 'To bring down,' if used without qualification, would, in such a connection, most naturally be referred to the overthrow of proud Babylon; comp. x. 13, xiv. 11, 15. But here the verb does not really stand unqualifiedly; it must be taken together with 'in (or into) the ships,' and then the phrase becomes analogous to 'to go down upon the sea' (xlii. 10, &c.) for 'to embark on a voyage.' 'The ships of their shouting' is one of those equivokes in which the prophets delight. It suggests that the very ships, which formerly resounded with shouts of exultation, now only echo with the cries of despair, and thus forms a condensed elegy on the strange περιπέτεια in the fortunes of the Chaldeans. [The Hebr. rinnah, in fact, will bear both meanings, 'cry of joy' and 'cry of grief,' though when used, as here, with a suffix, the latter meaning is the first which offers itself.<sup>1</sup> There is a singularly exact parallel in xvi. 9, 10, where 'the cry' (hedad) is used in a similarly double sense of the vintage-cheer and the battle-shout.] Either reference (to rejoicing or to lamentation) is equally appropriate in this context. Babylon was famous for its ships in the very earliest period of its history.<sup>2</sup> It was also famous for its music, and songs to the music of the cymbal (xiv. 11) may well have enlivened the voyages of its travelling merchants. The value of its ships as means of escape was seen by Merodach Baladan at one of the many crises of his history.<sup>1</sup> The Assyrian annalist mentions this in his usual dry way; the prophet is a poet as well, and hears the plaintive note of brave men 'crying aloud' (as xxxiii. 7).—The flight of the foreign merchants from the doomed city is referred to twice elsewhere; see xiii. 14, xlvii. 15.—The phraseology of the verse has struck so many critics as singular, that I hesitate to express a strong opinion in favour of the accuracy of the text. But why may not a poet express himself in an original manner? There is nothing contrary to usage in the disputed words, and Hitzig's and Ewald's attempts at correction are certainly un-Hebraic, not to add (with Del.) bombastic.—Fugitives] The Hebr. word (b̄rikhim) is uncommon, but occurs again in the same sense in xxvii. 1, xv. 5 (probably, but there is a similar doubt as to the reading), Job xxvi. 13. The reading b̄rikhim 'bars' does not cohere well with the context, and involves a less natural construction.

prophecy itself begins at v. 18; it is introduced by a vivid representation of the passage of the Israelites through the Red Sea.—Who giveth a road] Not 'who gave,' but 'who giveth' a road, as in the typical instance of old (so Del.). Comp. on li. 9, 10.

<sup>18</sup> Remember ye not . . .] So Jeremiah (xxiii. 7, 8) points to a time when the great manifestation of the living God shall no longer be the deliverance from Egypt, but the restoration of Israel from 'the recesses of the earth.' (Comp. by all means Jer. iii. 16, 17.) Both to Jeremiah and to our prophet the chief glories of the second manifestation are spiritual. 'I will make a new covenant . . . I will put my law in their inward parts' (Jer. xxxii. 31, 33). 'They shall tell out my praise' (v. 21).—Former things] Jehovah's past interpositions (comp. xlv. 9).

<sup>19</sup> A new thing] An unheard-of thing; see on xlii. 9, and comp. Jer. xxxi. 22. Note the singular.—It is shooting forth] A stronger statement than in xlii. 9b. Either events were more advanced than when the prophet penned that verse, or he has become more clear-sighted, owing to an increase of faith. The latter alternative is preferable. Faith, like friendship,<sup>2</sup> gives intensified keenness of vision. Like other faculties, it grows by exercise. Hence in the words, Will ye not give heed to it? the prophet calls upon his audience by a vigorous effort to see as he sees, and to recognise the roots of the future in the present. (In support of the rend. see xl. 21, xlviii. 6, 7, lviii. 3. The two former passages seem to me decisive. For alt. rend. comp. 'Are they not written?' i.e., 'Surely they are written.') A road in the wilderness . . . ] A symbolical description of the blissful state of the restored exiles. All their wants are supplied. The wilderness has become like the garden of Eden. Life is one stately procession. (Comp. on xxxv. 8, xl. 11, xli. 18.)

the wild beasts shall put off their ferocity, and by their changed natures unconsciously do honour to Jehovah. The prophet's best commentator is St. Francis. See further on xi. 6-9.

<sup>21</sup> But it is in Israel that this moral regeneration attains its climax. They alone have at once the physical power and the will to tell out my praise (comp. Ps. lxxix. 13). Thus Jehovah's purpose in 'forming' them shall be attained. By 'telling out' what God has done for them, and why He has done it, they shall overcome the inner opposition of the unconverted nations. Comp. the development of this in 1 Pet. ii. 9.

vv. 22-24. But the opposition between the ideal and the actual Israel forces itself upon the prophet's attention, and the tone of revelation, according to its wont, adapts itself to this altered mood. Jehovah now sums up the religious history of the Exile, portraying it as it appears from a distance. It is a black picture. No doubt there were redeeming points in this history, but not enough to lighten the prevailing hue to any appreciable extent. These three verses are among the most disputed in II. Isaiah. According to some (e.g., Hengst., Stier, Naeg., Kay), they furnish strong evidence that the author lived before the Babylonian Exile; according to others (e.g., Ew., Del.), they prove that his real or assumed 'standpoint' is among the exiles at Babylon. The difficulty lies in the interpretation of the first part of v. 23, and the first part of v. 24. These two clauses appear to deny absolutely that sacrifices had been offered by Israel to Jehovah. Yet how, asks the former class of commentators, could the exiles be charged with this neglect as an offence, sacrifices being impossible in a foreign land (Hos. iii. 4, Ps. li. 18, 19)? Is it not the want of faith and love which is complained of, rather than the neglect of the outward form of sacrifice? May not the phrase, 'with thy sacrifices thou hast not honoured me,' be compared with 'he that slaughtereth an ox (for sacrifice) is (equal to) a man-slayer' (lxvi. 3), where we must apparently understand the words 'in a formal, unspiritual manner'? On this view of the passage the complaint will be equivalent to the indignant question in i. 11, 'Of what use is the multitude of your sacrifices to me? saith Jehovah?' I do not myself accept this interpretation, because it seems inconsistent with the latter part of v. 23, in which Jehovah declares that the sacrificial system altogether was no part of his requirements (comp. Jer. vi. 20, vii. 21-23). The neglect of sacrifices does not appear to me to be charged against the people as an offence. The point of the complaint is, that the religious duties of the Jews being so very light, there was no possible excuse for neglecting them. Prayer was the only form of worship which Jehovah required. How this can have been said by a prophet who had before him an authoritative sacrificial code is, no doubt, a difficult question. Such passages as the present and as Jer. vii. 21, 23 indicate that the Levitical code, in its present form, was probably not known, and certainly not regarded as authoritative, by either of the prophetic writers. They may, however, perhaps be explained on the theory of oratorical exaggeration (see my Jeremiah, on vii. 21-23). But, at any rate, Ewald and Delitzsch are as mistaken as Hengstenberg in thinking that our passage is at all decisive as to the real or assumed 'standpoint' of the writer.

<sup>22</sup> Thou hast not called upon me] The Jews in exile are here charged with the neglect of prayer to Jehovah. That there was a faithful section of the nation, which poured out its heart before God, we know from the group of Exile-psalms, and perhaps from Isa. xxvi. 16. There is also a later passage in II. Isaiah (lviii. 2-4), which implies that, when the hope of deliverance dawned upon the Jews,<sup>1</sup> many of them put up at least formal petitions to Jehovah. But the statement of the revelation is doubtless true of the majority of the exiles during the greater part of the Captivity.—Alt. repd. is explained by Del. as meaning that 'Israel could exert itself to call upon other gods, but not upon Jehovah;' by Calv. and Viir., that its prayers were purely formal, and therefore not accepted by God (comp. Zech. vii. 5). In the Hebr. 'me' is prefixed ('But not me,' &c.), but this is probably for the sake of euphony; comp. I. Sam. ii. 3, Qrt, Ps. vii. 14, lxiii. 9, cxxxix. 17, Jer. xxxi. 8, in the Hebrew. I do not think it can be emphatic, otherwise v. 22 a will not be parallel to v. 23 a.—Hast thou wearied thyself] Note the parallelism between the second halves of this and the two next verses.

<sup>23</sup> Thou hast not brought me . . .] This looks like an accusation, but must be taken as qualified by the second half of the verse.—The sheep . . .] Alluding to the daily morning and evening sacrifice.—The three kinds of sacrifices—burnt-offerings, peace- or thank-offerings, and meal-offerings, and the incense, are grouped as in Jer. xvii. 26 (Stier).—I have not made a slave of thee with offerings] Sacrifices fell through during the Exile (see above). But it is also possible to explain this passage on the analogy of Jer. vi. 20, vii. 21-23.

<sup>1</sup> I accept for the present the view which has become traditional, that the description in chap. lviii. relates to an episode in the life of the Jewish exiles.

vv. 25-28. Here the connection becomes clear again. Jehovah is still the speaker; he offers Israel a free pardon. Israel, on his side, hesitates to admit his need of it. Jehovah replies by calling upon Israel to mention his supposed meritorious works. But Israel has no such works to mention. On the contrary, as Jehovah reminds him, he has been a sinner from the beginning. This is the true cause of Israel's present humiliation.

<sup>26</sup> Call to my remembrance] See last note. Dr. Weir suggests a new interpretation. 'Do not the words rather mean—Only put me in mind of thy relation to me, and of my promises to thee, my Servant, recount what I have already done for thee as my Servant, that through my grace thou mayest be justified and saved?' (Comp. the use of the same verb in lxii. 6, lxiii. 7.) He thus obtains a closer connection with the last verse: 'Thy sins I will not remember; only thou put me in mind of my promise, and plead with me on that ground.'

<sup>27</sup> Thy first father . . .] The general sense is that of Ps. li. 5, if the speaker there is a representative of the nation. 'Father' may (1) = founder of the nation, as Gen. x. 21, &c.; and the founder of the Jewish nation may be either (a) Abraham (Rashi, Stier, Del., Naeg.), comp. li. 2, lxiii. 16, Matt. iii. 9, or (b) Jacob (Ew., Seinecke, H. Schultz, Kay), comp. lviii. 14, and the common phrase, 'children of Israel.' Of the two, Jacob is much the more probable, for Abraham is too emphatically canonised by the voice of prophecy (see xli. 8) to be described here as the first sinner, whereas certain events in Jacob's life were felt by the prophets to be spots on the fair fame of that patriarch; see Jer. ix. 4, and comp. John i. 47, 'in truth a guileless son of Israel' (spoken with a lofty irony). Or (2) 'father' may be a collective = 'fathers'; comp. Gen. xxxi. 29, 42, 53 (?), Ex. iii. 6, xv. 2, xviii. 4. In this case, the 'fathers' of Israel will be either their ancestors (Ges.), or the leaders of the nation in matters civil (xxii. 21) and religious<sup>1</sup> (Judges xvii. 10, 2 Kings ii. 12). The latter view is taken by Sept. ('your first fathers'), and among moderns by Hengst. and Henderson (the high priests collectively from Aaron onwards), but is opposed by the occurrence of a plural in the parallel line. Of less likely conjectures, I will only mention these three. Kimchi, followed by Hitz., Knob., Merx (Hiob, p. iv.), Pusey (Daniel, p. 407), thinks of Adam; Vittr. of Uriah, the High Priest in the reign of Ahaz (2 Kings xvi. 10-16); Luzatto of the sons of Jeshua the High Priest in Ezra's time, who offended by taking foreign wives (Ezra x. 18). The reader will have gathered that I myself agree with Ewald (see above 1 b). — Thy mediators] The 'interpreters' (so literally), i.e., 'mediators' or 'ambassadors' (the rendering of A. V. in 2 Chron. xxxii. 31), are the prophets and the priests, especially the former. The intercession of a prophet is sometimes described as effectual in the greatest perils of the nation (Ps. cvi. 23, comp. Ex. xxxii. 10-14, 31, 32), though before the Exile, Jeremiah is told that the prayer of the greatest prophets could not then avert the punishment of Judah (xv. 1, comp. xi. 14). Both classes of passages prepare us for the announcement of a higher Mediator, in whom Jehovah is so 'well pleased' that he cannot refuse to accept his intercession (liiii. 12). The word rendered 'mediator' (milti) is also used of an angel of high rank specially friendly to man, Job xxxiii. 23.—Rebelled against me] See Jeremiah's denunciation of the deceitful prophets (Jer. xxiii).

<sup>28</sup> I profaned] i.e., 'treated as holding no relation to me' (Jehovah); so xlvii. 6. (The reading of the pointed text assumes that the profanation is future; comp. on lxiii. 3, 6. So the Targum. See, however, xlii. 25).—Consecrated princes] i.e., (1) the chief priests, who are called by this very title in 1 Chron. xxiv. 5; (2) the kings Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, who had received the 'holy oil' (Ps. lxxxix. 20).

CHAPTER XLIV.

Vv. 1-5. But let not the true Israel be discouraged. 'It is a light thing' that he shall pass uninjured through the judgments which are coming upon the world (xliii. 2), and even that the grievous dispersion caused by the various captivities shall have an end. A nobler object of ambition is to be placed before him—the introduction of the heathen nations within the circle of higher spiritual influences. Success is assured to him by one of the grandest Divine promises.

These verses ought to have formed part of the preceding chapter, with which the two first words connect it. The error in the current division of the chapters is owing to the analogy of the opening of chap. xliii. But though there is a similar transition, similarly introduced, at the head of both chapters, there is a manifest break in the discourse at the end of xlv. 5, which makes it entirely misleading to continue the chapter.

so Israel has an alternative appellation with his Divine friend. In the earlier name—Israel—the militant character of Jehovah's people was brought prominently forward; in the new name it is the moral attribute of uprightness which is emphasised, corresponding to the new office of teacher conferred upon the spiritual Israel. Thus there are three names for Jehovah's people, Jacob—Israel—Jeshurun, and each represents a separate phase of moral progress.—The meaning of Jeshurun (a derivative of yāshār, 'upright') is the Upright One.<sup>1</sup> 'Uprightness,' indeed, is the constant burden of the Old Testament:—the ethical character of its religion is the source of its vitality. In Num. xxiii. 10, 'Israel' and 'the upright' are even used synonymously; and a collection of traditions and lyric poems relative to model Israelites received the appellation, 'The Book of the Righteous One' (Auth. Vers. 'the Book of Jasher').<sup>2</sup>—The name Jeshurun only occurs again in the 'Song of Moses' and the 'Blessing of Moses' (Deut. xxxii. 15, xxxiii. 5, 26).—Whom I have chosen] The addition illustrates the meaning of the word Jeshurun. It is an 'imputed righteousness (or, uprightness)' which is the ground of Israel's election

<sup>a</sup> I will pour water] See on xli. 17, 18, and comp. the transition in Joel ii. 23–28 from the gift of rain to the outpouring of the Spirit.—

I will pour my Spirit] What it is to have the Spirit of Jehovah we know from xi. 2, 3, and especially from xlii. 1–4. It is to be full of the knowledge and fear of God, and to make the world-wide spread of the true religion the chief object of life. After such a promise has been given in this half-verse, we are bound not to interpret the next verse too narrowly, as if it meant no more than Zech. ix. 17 (Q. P. B.).—Upon thy seed] And who are the 'seed' of Jacob? See v. 5 for the answer.

<sup>b</sup> As grass] Grass is generally used as an image of what is transient and soon withers, but now and then of an abundant growth, as in Job v. 25, Ps. lxxii. 16.—The Sept. reading completes the parallelism, and restores symmetry to the paragraph.—As poplars] Not 'willows'; see Wetzstein in Del.'s commentary on the passage. The same word as in xv. 7.—Water-courses] Artificially conducted streams.

<sup>c</sup> The stunted spiritual condition even of the few believers in Israel shall be remedied (vv. 3, 4). But how? This is explained in the next verse. It is not merely the 'seed' of believers in a natural sense to which the outpouring of the Spirit is guaranteed (v. 3), but the whole body of believers in the coming Messianic age. 'God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham' (Matt. iii. 9). Comp. on xlv. 25.—This one shall say . . . ] (Obs., the first and the third clauses correspond, the second and the fourth.) The prophet is so full of the idea of a comprehensive Church of Jehovah, that without any warning he transports us into the midst of the thronging Jewish proselytes.<sup>1</sup> The description reminds us somewhat of Ps. lxxvii. 4, 5 (already compared by Vittr.), where the representatives of the heathen nations are described as being born anew in Zion. Comp. also Zech. viii. 23 (referred to by 'many' in Ibn Ezra's time).—Celebrate . . . ] See on xii. 4.—Mark on his hand ] i.e., to express his devotion to his new-found God. Such sacred marks seem to have been once very prevalent in Palestine, and the Damascene ladies retain the habit of tattooing hands, feet, chin, forehead, and breast.<sup>2</sup> Such a prohibition as Lev. xix. 28 ('nor print any marks upon you') could never have been carried out absolutely, and probably referred merely to heathenish tattooing (see the context, and Deut. xiv. 1). Our prophet, however, though he presupposes the custom of tattooing, of course does not mean to be taken literally. Similar phrases are used elsewhere. For instance, 'I bear the marks of Jesus in my body' (Gal. vi. 17). 'Mark a cross upon the foreheads of the men who sigh and groan over all the abominations which take place in their midst' (Ezek. ix. 4, so Rev. vii. 3, ix. 4, xiii. 16, xiv. 1, 9). 'And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes' (Ex. xiii. 9, which is not to be violently harmonized with Deut. vi. 8). 'Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands' (xlix. 16, see note). The rend. 'write with his hand' (i.e. subscribe to a solemn form of dedication to Jehovah, comp. Neh. ix., x.) is not without a theological bearing. It seems intended to exclude any favourable allusion to a custom of heathenish origin. That tattooing is such a custom cannot be doubted; see Herod. ii. 113, vii. 235, Lucian de ded. syr., 59, and comp. the sacred marks on the Vishnavite sects in India, and Waitz's instructive remarks on Polynesian tattooing.<sup>3</sup> But such Puritanism is unhistorical. The Biblical religion is not that 'exclusive and unsympathetic faith' which Positivists represent it to be. See further crit. note.

<sup>1</sup> Jeshurun is often stated to be a diminutive (e.g., by Ges., Hitz., Ew., Hender-son), but on very weak grounds. Are Zebulun and Jedithun diminutives? and would 'my pious little one' (Ewald renders it Frömmchen) be in harmony with the fatherly seriousness of Jehovah's language? It is simply a personal name, as Justus Olshausen, Delitzsch, and (in his academical lectures) Dr. Pusey, rightly regard it.

<sup>1</sup> It has been doubted whether Judaism can be called a proselytising religion. (See Prof. Max Müller's Lectures on Missions.) We should certainly expect it a priori to be so; such fervent monotheism could not help endeavouring to extend its sway. The words of the above revelation, moreover, certainly regard it as being such, for converts imply missionaries. Yet the evidence for the post-Captivity periods is, I admit, conflicting, and does not allow a generalisation. Wünsche says there is no evidence in the Talmud that the Pharisees were greedy of proselytes, but Matt. xxiii. 15, must have some foundation (the school of Hillel seems to have been more favourable to aspirants than that of Shammai). The Jews of the Dispersion certainly were proselytizers. In Damascus, in Arabia, on the shores of the Caspian, in Asia Minor, in Greece and Rome, the attraction exercised by Judaism is as certain a fact as any in history.

—Be titled . . .] 'Israel' or 'Son of Israel' shall be regarded henceforth as the most honourable title which a man can bear.—It is a peculiar kind of title which is referred to, analogous to the Roman cognomen, and still more closely to the kunya of men of distinction among the Arabs, which generally has a political or religious significance (e.g., Salâkh-eddîn, i.e., 'salus religionis'). The verb used in the Hebrew (kinnaḥ) is radically the same; from it is derived in later Hebrew kinnaḥ (i.e., a cognomen or agnomen, though not specially in an honourable sense). It occurs again in the same sense in xlv. 4, and in Job xxxii. 21, 22, in that of 'to flatter' (Auth. Vers. 'Give flattering titles').<sup>1</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Here begins one of the principal sections of the prophecy. It is prefaced by a short and simple but majestic proclamation of Jehovah concerning His being. I am the first and I am the last] 'I am before all things, and shall still endure though all creation pass away.' So xlviii. 12; comp. the slightly different form of expression in xli. 4, and Rev. i. 8, 17, xxii. 13. 'The last' has here the same sense as in Job xix. 25 (see Q. P. B.)

natory. The prophecies of Jehovah (i.e., inspired by Jehovah) reach back to the 'placing' of the people of antiquity . . . It is doubted whether the latter phrase means the Jews (Vitr., Ges., Kay, Weir), or the first inhabitants of the world (Ibn Ezra, Kimchi, Hitz., Del.). Dr. Weir thinks that 'the comparison of v. 8 shows that Jehovah is here appealing to the long-continued experience of his people in the past; and therefore the point indicated in "since I placed, &c.," is the call of Abraham.' In support of this view he very aptly quotes the expression in lxi. 11, 'The days of old (or of antiquity), of Moses.' If, however, the Jews are to be brought in, it seems better to adopt Ewald's rendering, 'the everlasting people,' with reference to the 'everlasting covenant' (Ex. xxxi. 16), the 'everlasting priesthood' (Ex. xl. 15), and the 'everlasting kingdom' (2 Sam. vii. 13, 16), promised to the people of Israel. Such a description of the Jews is fine and poetical, and not out of harmony with the context (see Stier). It suggests the everlastingness of God's people, in opposition to the proximate fall of the idolatrous nations, as arising naturally out of its relation to prophecy and to 'the everlasting God' (xl. 28). But I cannot help thinking with Del. that, if Israel had been meant, it would have been more directly mentioned. Our prophet, as we have seen already, takes a singularly wide view of the course of history, and the comparison of a passage in the Book of Job (so rich in phraseological and doctrinal parallels), where the manner of life of the antediluvian men is called 'the way of antiquity' (A. V., 'the old way'), confirms the view adopted above. I suppose, then, the Divine speaker to affirm that the succession of prophets goes back to the creation of man—a statement which agrees with the Book of Genesis, and seems to be repeated in xlvi. 16 (see note).—Placed implies that the creation of man had a purpose, viz., the same to which all prophecy points—the conscious and intelligent glorification of God.—People is here used in the same sense as in xlii. 5.—Things that shall come] Not merely things pretended as future, but such as shall actually come to pass (Naeg.).

Hos. vi. 9, where the priests of the kingdom of Israel are called a khabher. Here the prophet means the worshippers of the idol, who together formed a kind of guild, and by partaking of the sacrificial meals were brought into a mystical union with the god whom they worshipped: comp. Ps. cvi. 28, 'They yoked themselves to Baal-Peor'; Hos. iv. 17, 'Ephraim is (khabhâr) in association with idols'; 1 Cor. x. 20, 'I would not have you become associates with demons'; Mark i. 23, 'a man fastened to (év = the Beth societatis) an unclean spirit.' <sup>12, 13</sup> A specimen of the 'grim and caustic' Hebrew humour, describing the laborious process of 'making a god,' first of all of iron, and then of wood.

<sup>14</sup> The prophet resumes the history of the wooden idol. The mode of production of the metal is a mystery; iron comes from 'a path which no eagle knoweth' (Job xxviii. 7). But the idol of wood can be traced further back. Nature itself has been visibly at work, or rather—strange irony of circumstance!—the true God Himself who 'sendeth his rain' equally upon believers and misbelievers. The description 'moves retrogressively' (Del.); the mention of the trees suggests their selection, and this again their planting. Tastes may differ; but all agree in choosing good solid timber.—Fixeth his choice] Rendering as xli. 10.—A pine] The Heb. 'ōren obviously = Ass. irin, the cedar of Lebanon (see on xli. 19). Consequently the former must, at any rate, be some tree more akin to the cedar than to the ash.

<sup>16</sup> One half of the wood the man uses to make a fire for cooking, and for warming himself.—Half thereof, in the second line, does not mean the other half of the wood (as is plain from v. 17; see also v. 19). The words (or rather, in the Hebr., word) are only repeated to make out a second member to the verse.

<sup>21</sup> A fresh section begins here, introduced by an admonition. Israel, attached by such special ties to Jehovah, should remember these things (i.e., the folly of idolatry, comp. xlii. 8). — And Israel] i.e., 'and remember this, O Israel.' — Canst not be forgotten . . .] As Jehovah's people foolishly complains (xl. 27, xlix. 14). Against alt. rend. see Del.

<sup>22-23</sup> Jehovah has already proved (or is on the point of proving) his fidelity to his covenant by pardoning and redeeming (or rather releasing) Israel. Pardon and release are but two sides of one and the same deliverance. 'There is no peace' (even externally) 'for the ungodly,' and those who would return to Zion must first return to Jehovah. But it is Jehovah who makes the first advances. He calls for conversion, on the ground that I have released thee] 'The Israel of God' cannot perish; the only question which remains is one for man's free will to settle, viz., the numbers of those who shall constitute it.

heavens, for Jehovah hath done nobly ; shout, ye depths of the earth ; burst out, ye mountains, into a ringing sound ; thou forest, and every tree therein ! for Jehovah hath redeemed Jacob, and beautifieth himself with Israel. <sup>24</sup> Thus saith Jehovah, thy Goel, and he that formed thee from the womb ; I am Jehovah, the maker of everything, that stretched forth the heavens alone, that spread forth the earth—<sup>a</sup> who was with me ? <sup>b</sup> <sup>25</sup> that bringeth to nought the signs of the praters, and maketh the diviners mad, that turneth wise men backward, and proveth their knowledge to be folly, <sup>26</sup> that lower parts) of the earth' are the valleys and plains, as opposed to the mountains ; and Del. arbitrarily distinguishes Sheól from 'the interior of the earth, with its caves, its pits, and its deep abysses.' But there is one argument conclusive against these theories, viz., that wherever this and similar phrases occur (see crit. note) there is always an implied reference to Sheól : Vitr. has in vain attempted to disprove this.—The difficulty of these critics may be met in two ways ; either, with Stier and Hahn, by comparing xxvi. 19, where some, at least, of the dwellers in Sheól are called upon to rejoice, or, better (since this view is not favoured by the context, and is opposed by xlix. 13, where the appeal is made to the heavens, the earth, and the mountains,) by supposing that Sheól is not here referred to as the abode of the departed, but as a part of the material world. The passage is simply a poetical apostrophe, like 'Hear, O heavens ! and give ear, O earth,' though I would not deny that there may be an allusion to the regeneration of which heaven and earth are to be the subjects (lxv. 17).—To mountains] The mountains are introduced to make a second antithesis with 'the depths of the earth.' In Ps. xcvi. 11 their place is taken by the sea. Comp. the striking apostrophe to the mountains (by themselves) in Mic. vi. 2.—Beautifieth himself] So xlix. 3, lx. 21, lxi. 3. Comp. 'Thou shalt be a crown of beauty, in the hand of Jehovah, &c., lxii. 3.

<sup>24</sup> The prophet gathers up his strength for a fresh flight. The God of creation and of prophecy has already selected His instrument for Israel's liberation.—Who was with me ?] As my counsellor (xl. 13). This, as the more peculiar reading, and the more easily altered, should have the preference. Comp. Job ix. 8, 'Who alone spread out the heavens.'

<sup>26</sup> His servant] The context shows that 'servant' is here a synonym for prophet ; comp. Mic. iii. 7, 8, where the prophetic writer is opposed to the deceitful prophets (comp. v. 25). Isaiah is expressly called Jehovah's servant in xx. 3 ; the Egyptians, too, according to Brugsch, called their prophets by a term meaning 'servant of God' (hon nyter).<sup>1</sup> Calv. and Ges. think 'servant' is here used collectively for 'servants,' i.e., prophets. But in this case should we not expect 'messenger' in the parallel line, on the analogy of xlii. 19 ? It is, I

<sup>28</sup> That saith of Cyrus] 'The mention of Cyrus by name is here the seal to the truth and consistency of the whole message.' We may adopt these words of Prof. Birks, though not quite in the sense in which he uses them. The prophet does not say, 'Behold, a child shall be born, Cyrus by name, and he shall be my shepherd' (comp. the prediction of Josiah's birth, 1 Kings xiii. 2), but, assuming the existence of a person named Cyrus, predicts that he, and no scion of the Davidic house (as the Jews may well have supposed), was the chosen instrument of Israel's deliverance. Here, as in the greater part of chaps. xl.-xlv., the prophet incontrovertibly occupies the standing-ground of a Jewish exile in Babylon. It is not surprising that a Roman Catholic critic<sup>1</sup> (Dr. P. Schegg) should pronounce the whole verse to be a later explanatory addition, and the words (or rather word) 'to Cyrus' (Phōresā) in xlv. 1 to have the same origin, or that Dr. Plumptre (following Hengstenberg) should have tried to show that the name of Cyrus may have come to Isaiah by natural means. The theory of the former critic seems to me as purely arbitrary as any fancy of the older rationalists ; the attempt of the latter is perfectly justifiable, and I cannot but sympathise deeply with it, as it springs from a well-founded objection to the mechanical theory of prophetic revelations. Dr. Plumptre's explanation<sup>2</sup> is perfect, if only his facts are sound. If it can be shown (1) that Cyrus was an old titular name of the Persian kings (like Pharaoh for the kings of Egypt) ; (2) that it signifies 'the sun,' and (3) that there were communications between Judah and Persia in Isaiah's time, then it is a very probable supposition that Isaiah would hear of the name, and connect it with the Divine revelations. But I fear the two former positions (not to criticise the third) cannot any longer be maintained. The meaning of 'the sun' for Cyrus rests ultimately upon a statement of Plutarch<sup>3</sup> ; it was long ago questioned by our countryman Gataker, and, as Lassen and Spiegel have argued, is philologically untenable.<sup>4</sup> The recently discovered Cyrus-inscription shows that the name (which the Cyrus-cylinder gives as kuras) is not even Aryan at all, being of Elamitish origin. Prof. Sayce plausibly connects it with kur = 'mountain' (in proto-Medic and Accadian inscriptions), and remarks that we have thus a ready explanation of the old Herodotean legend of Cyrus's childhood (Academy, October 16, 1880, p. 277). — Cyrus] Hebr. kôresh (the last vowel pronounced very short; the word is a so-called 'segolate' in form. — My Shepherd] i.e., no mere ordinary ruler, but one appointed by me to shepherd my people Israel; comp. Ezek. xxxiv. 11, &c., and see above on xl. 11. — Josephus makes this interesting statement: — 'Now this became known to Cyrus by his reading the book which Esaias left behind him of his prophecy; for this man said that God had spoken thus to him in secret: My will is that Cyrus, &c. This was prophesied by Esaias one hundred and forty years before the demolition of the temple. When therefore Cyrus had read this, and marvelled at the divinity, a kind of impulse (comp. on xlv. 13 b) and ambition seized upon him to fulfil what was so written' (Jos. Ant. xii. 1, 2). May there not be an element of truth in this story? May not Isa. xlv. 24–xlv. 7 have been written, partly at least, with an apologetic purpose, and intended for Cyrus as well as for Jewish readers. The apologies for the Christians addressed to the Roman emperors missed their mark and were unread; it is perfectly conceivable that the apology for the Jews addressed to Cyrus was more fortunate.

Two illustrations of these passages from an Assyrian source seem worth noticing.<sup>1</sup>

It has been observed above that the prophetic writer assumes, rather than predicts, the existence of Cyrus, that he omits to mention by how many years (if any) his announcement preceded the birth of the Deliverer. His interest is in fact wholly absorbed by the momentous enterprise which has been confided to Cyrus. The following quotation from the Annals of Assurbanipal (king of Assyria from 667 to 626 B.C.) supplies a contrast rather than a parallel to this studious reticence. It relates to an event of special interest, both on its own account and for its connection with the fourteenth chapter of Genesis, viz., the raid of the Elamitish king, Kudur-nankhundi, into Babylonia. Assurbanipal appears to state that his name, and the high religious duty committed to him, had been predicted more than a thousand years before. These are his words: — 'Nana, who 1635 years had been desecrated, had gone, and dwelt | in Elam, a place not appointed to her; | and in those days, she and the gods her fathers | proclaimed my name to the dominion of the earth. | The return of her divinity she entrusted to me thus: "Assurbanipal from the midst of Elam (wicked), | bring me out, and cause me to enter into Bitanna." | The will commanded by their divinity, which from days remote | they had uttered, again they spoke to later people.'

This is a good specimen of the extravagance of fictitious prophecy, and illustrates the reasonable demand of the prophet in xliii. 9, 'Let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified.'

The second is of value, as showing how familiar the idea of predestination was to another Semitic nation besides the Jewish. It illustrates, not only the passage quoted above (xlv. 4), but also xlix. 1, where of 'the Servant' it is said, 'from my mother's lap (or, womb) hath he made mention of my name.' The same king Assurbanipal states at the solemn opening of his Annals, that the gods 'in the body of his mother have made (him) to rule Assyria.'

CHAPTER XLV.

Contents.—The achievements of Cyrus; the sinful murmurings of Israel rebuked; then, returning to the bright theme of restoration, the conversion of the southern nations and of those who escape in the judgment on the heathen world.

vv. 1-8.—Arrived at this culminating point of his first strain of prophecy, the writer lingers awhile on the motives of the Divine favour to Cyrus. Three of these are mentioned—(1) That he might be led to acknowledge the true God, (2) that Israel might be liberated, and (3) that the world might be converted from false religions. Then follows a short song of praise.

<sup>1</sup> To his anointed] LXX. τῷ χριστῷ μου; Vulg., christo meo. Cyrus is the only non-Jewish king called Jehovah's 'anointed one' (Hebr. māshīakh = Messiah), the only non-Davidic ruler Dei gratia (unless Nebuchadnezzar be thought an exception, see Jer. xxvii. 6, xliii. 10). It is a conjecture of Ewald's that the phrase involves a rebuke to those of the exiles who, on the ground of the ancient prophecies, were expecting an Israelitish deliverer. Against this it may be urged (1) That the ideal king of the future is nowhere in the prophetic canon called 'the Anointed One';

(2) That it is but the least important of the functions of him whom we, following the traditional interpretation of Dan. ix. 26, call the Messiah (or the Messianic king), which is here allotted to Cyrus (see J. C. A., p. 166). It would be a more plausible conjecture that the prophet was looking forward to an independent Israelitish empire to be set up by Cyrus; for in v. 14 he speaks of captives from neighbouring countries coming to Jerusalem, and later on of kings being the 'nursing-fathers' and humble vassals of Zion (xlix. 23). The prophet may have understood this; but folding-doors, and that the gates may not be shut: <sup>2</sup> I will go before thee, and will make swelling places plain; folding-doors of brass I will break in pieces, and bars of iron will I cut in sunder; <sup>3</sup> and I will give thee treasures of darkness, and hidden things of secret places, that thou mayest acknowledge that I am Jehovah, I that call thee by thy name, the God of Israel. <sup>4</sup> For the sake of Jacob my servant, and of Israel mine elect, I have called unto thee by thy name, I have titled thee, when thou hast not known me. <sup>5</sup> I am Jehovah, and there is none else; besides me there is no God; I girded thee when thou knewest me not; <sup>6</sup> that men might know believers in revelation will not admit that the prophet's view of the meaning of this revelation is decisive.—To ungird the loins . . .] i.e., to disarm, the weapons being carried at the girdle or belt; comp. Ps. xlv. 3, Judges xviii. 11. So 'to gird,' v. 5, means 'to arm.'—Folding-doors] i.e., those of the cities which Cyrus attacks, and of the temples. Comp. Baruch vi. 18, 'the priests make fast their temples with folding-doors, with bolts and bars, lest these should be spoiled by robbers.'

<sup>2</sup> Swelling places] Milton's 'tumid hills.'—Doors of brass] Babylon had 'a hundred gates, all of brass, with brazen lintels and side-posts' (Herod. i. 179, comp. 180). 'The way in which the city was treated would lead us to suppose that its acquisition cannot have cost the conqueror either much time or much loss . . . it is certain that the vast walls and gates were left untouched' (Grote, History of Greece, iv. 287). This remark is fully borne out by the inscription relating to the capture of Babylon translated by Mr. Pinches. After the defeat of Nabonidus, Babylon opened its gates to the conqueror without a struggle (T.S.B.A., vii. 184). Prosaic persons may, if they please, point to this as an instance of the non-fulfilment of prophecy. One of the psalmists thought differently (see Ps. cvii. 16).—Treasures of darkness] Comp. the description of Babylon as 'abundant in treasures' (Jer. li. 13) and as πολύχρυσος (Æsch. Persæ, 53).—That thou mayest acknowledge] See on xli. 25-29.

'For the sake of Jacob . . .] 'En magnam sententiam vatis! Fata imperiorum et regnorum mundi à Deo disponi cum respectu ad ecclesiam.' Vitringa. A true exposition, though the prophet clearly instructs us elsewhere, that not only is Cyrus for the sake of Israel, but Israel for the sake of those who are capable of 'faith' among the Gentiles.—

I have titled thee] viz., with the honourable epithets, 'My shepherd,' 'My anointed.' It is the same very peculiar verb which we met with in xlv. 5 (see note).—

When thou hast not known me] This might mean, 'When thou wast not a worshipper of mine, and hadst no special claim on my consideration.' (So Calv., Vit., Knob.) But in that case, should we not expect the sequel to run 'that thou mayest know' (or acknowledge)? At any rate, it enriches the context to explain the phrase on the analogy of xlix. 1, 'From the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.' (So Del., Naeg., Kay.) For Cyrus may in a manner be called the twin-brother of 'Jehovah's Servant.'

'Several important movements in the direction of monotheism (notably, the Pythagorean . . .) had their origin about the time of Cyrus' from the rising of the sun and from the setting thereof, that there is none beside me—I am Jehovah and there is none else—<sup>7</sup> that form light and create darkness, and make welfare and create calamity,—I am Jehovah, the maker of all these things.

<sup>8</sup> Shower, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let <sup>a</sup> them bear

• So Naeg.—Salvation blossom, Hitz., Ew., Del., Weir.

(Kay). Let us frankly admit, however, that the prophet antedates the glorious prospect revealed to him. He would certainly not have been satisfied with 'monotheistic movements.'

<sup>7</sup> That form light . . . ] 'The alternation of day and night is Jehovah's ordinance; so also is the alternation of light and darkness in Providence, of peace and war, of success and misfortune, of good and evil. Comp. Lam. iii. 38' (Dr. Weir). See also liv. 16, Am. iii. 6. —Saadya (as reported by Kimchi) found in this passage a protest against Persian dualism,<sup>1</sup> and the view has been accepted without remonstrance by the latest critics. No doubt it harmonizes well with the prevalent fancy for 'tendencies,' and, if the prophecy were not of so early a date, it would be impossible to deny a degree of plausibility to the theory. If, however, dualism is referred to at all (which I doubt, the language of the prophet being so general), it is rather the primitive dualism of the Babylonian religion (on which see Lenormant's La magie chez les Chaldéens). As for the earlier Persian religion, the inscriptions of the Achæmenidæ (e.g., that of Darius at Nakshi Rostam)<sup>2</sup> are as guiltless of dualism as our prophet himself. But the form of the prophecy is rather chosen with regard to its application to Israel. The 'light' and the 'welfare' are that happy state to which Israel was to be restored through (but not by) Cyrus; the 'darkness' and the 'calamity,' the misery and woe of the Exile (comp. xlii. 7).—Welfare] Or, peace (lit., wholeness).—Calamity] Lit., evil; comp. xlvii. 11, lvii. 1, and Jerome's note here. [One of the earliest Jewish 'Benedictions' is based upon this passage. It omits the word 'calamity,' however, because, according to the esoteric doctrine, nothing that God creates is evil.]—All these things] i.e., 'all that has been mentioned;' not, 'all this that thou seest' (comp. lxvi. 2).

the case in xlvi. 13, and is in more complete accordance with the usage of the prophet ; comp. also li. 5, 6, 8 ; lvi. 1, lix. 17, lxi. 10, 11, lxii. 1.

—Let them bear . . . ] The suppressed subject is 'heaven and earth' (Naeg.).—Have created it] As xli. 20.

vv. 9-13. The sure promise of Jehovah is contrasted with the little faith of Israel, who murmurs, not at the nationality of the Deliverer (as Ewald represents), but at the tardy advent of the deliverance. The prophet rejoins, 'Woe unto him, who, though made of earth, and with no intrinsic superiority over others of his race, presumes to find fault with his Maker, and to criticise providential arrangements.' It is one of the most decisive Biblical assertions of the Divine sovereignty. For the image of the potter, comp. xxix. 16, lxiv. 8, and especially Jer. xviii. 1-6, xix. 1, 10, 11, Rom. ix. 20-24. It is extremely characteristic, and is evidently based on the account in Gen. ii. 7.—A potsherd among potsherds of the ground] 'Among,' or 'like'; lit., 'with.'—The rendering, however, is only probable. The ideas of 'among' and 'like' are but loosely expressed by the preposition 'with,' and there is the further difficulty (pointed out by Dr. Weir) of giving the same preposition (eth) a different sense in two successive clauses. Calvin remarks, 'Id est quod vulgò dicere solemus, Que chacun se prenne à son partil. Testa cum testis contendat.' But this ellipsis of 'contendat' is very harsh.—What makest thou?] Implying, Thou makest me amiss.—He hath no hands] i.e., he has no power (comp. Josh. viii. 20, Ps. lxxvi. 5) ; or, better in this connection, no skill. Calvin compares the French phrase, mettre la dernière main.

<sup>9</sup> Woe unto him that striveth with him that formed him, a potsherd among potsherds of the ground ! Doth the clay say to him that formeth it, What makest thou ? or thy work, He hath no hands ? <sup>10</sup> Woe unto him that sayeth to a father, What begetteth thou ? or to a woman, What bringest thou forth ? <sup>11</sup> Thus saith Jehovah, the Holy One of Israel, and

<sup>10</sup> Another figure expressing the discontent which fixes itself on 'second causes.' A child expostulates with its parents for having brought so weak, or deformed, or ugly a being into the world.—What begetteth thou ?] It is not said Why begetteth thou ? (as Job iii. 11, 12, x. 18,) but What, either as a question of anger, or an exclamation of scorn.—To a woman]

Perhaps to emphasize the speaker's want of natural affection (Stier).

<sup>11</sup> Jehovah here speaks without figure. 'Will ye be so presumptuous as to catechise me on the future, or to dictate to me on my providential arrangements for my people ?' Stier mentions this view as Calvin's (though I do not find it in the 1551 edition of Calvin's Isaiah), but justly asks how it can he that formed him, Concerning the things to come 'will ye question me' ? concerning my sons and the work of my hands 'will ye lay commands upon me' ?<sup>d</sup> <sup>12</sup> It was I that made the earth and created the men upon it ; my hands that stretched out the heavens, and upon all their host do I lay commands. <sup>13</sup> It was I who stirred him up in righteousness, and all his ways will I make level ; he shall build my city, and mine exiled ones shall he send home, not for price, and not for reward, saith Jehovah Sabáoth.

be reconciled with the imperative in the first clause. Certainly it cannot be, if the text-reading be correct. But is it possible to translate the text-reading in such a way as to satisfy at once the requirements of the context and those of linguistic usage ? Wherever the Hebrew verb (šivvakh) is used elsewhere in this construction, and with the sense ascribed to it of 'giving over to one's keeping and direction,' the subject of the verb is invariably Jehovah, or some superior (see, e.g., 1 Sam. xiii. 14, xxv. 30, &c.). It seems very doubtful whether the words before us can be used of man committing any object to the care of God. This seems an insurmountable difficulty, for it is clear from the context that we have no right to suppose the language of the prophet to be ironical (Dr. Weir).—A very slight alteration is required to reconcile the difference between sense and grammar, viz., to suppose, with Dr. Weir, that a letter (Tāv) which ought to have been repeated has dropped out—no uncommon phenomenon in the Masoretic text ! The appropriateness of the rendering thus obtained is self-evident.—Concerning my sons] A deep saying. Jehovah implies at once that it must be well with those whom he regards as his sons (Hos. i. 10), and that those who murmur against him tacitly renounce the privilege of sonship.

<sup>12</sup> The absurdity of such presumptuous conduct, the subject of criticism being One who is the creator and commander of the universe.—All their host] i.e., the stars, not the angels (Baudissin); see on xl. 26.—Do I lay commands] Or, 'Did I lay commands' (i.e., 'I commanded them into existence ;' comp. xlviii. 5). This is not unsuitable to the context. But the analogy of xlviii. 13 favours the rendering adopted. Comp. Josh. x. 12, Ps. civ. 4.

<sup>13</sup> Who stirred him up . . .] The same phrases occur in xli. 25, xlii. 6, xlv. 2.—Not for price] Not from earthly motives, but from an irresistible Divine impulse. So Josephus (see on xlv. 28) ascribes the action of Cyrus to ὁρμή τις.—It is quite conceivable that a lofty spirit like that of Cyrus may have at once obeyed the dictates of religious sympathy with the Jews. The baser earthly motives ('not for price' = 'not for money,' lii. 3) are at any rate excluded in his case. How far his resolution may have been confirmed by a consideration of the usefulness of such a faithful advanced guard at the border of Egypt, it is impossible to say. [I leave this note as it was written, referring for the necessary corrections to the note at the end of chap. xlvii., and to Essay xi. in Vol. II.]

vv. 14-17. The conversion of Cyrus, representing the north, is now balanced by that of Egypt and the neighbouring countries, representing the south. In xliii. 3 these regions are said to be 'given' to Cyrus as a compensation for his liberality towards Israel. Here, however, their inhabitants are described as 'going over' to Israel of their own free will (comp. προσέλνυται), and surrendering their wealth (impliedly for sacred uses, as xxiii. 18) to Israel:—it is the same prospect which is held out in Ps. lxxviii. 31. The inconsistency is only apparent, the later prophecy referring to the Messianic period, when Cyrus shall have given place to the Servant of Jehovah. According to Knobel, these Egyptians and Ethiopians are a part of the captives of Cyrus, who, the prophet anticipates, will present them to the Jews as slaves, to labour on the new building-works at Jerusalem (like the Canaanites in 1 Kings ix. 15–21). A prosaic and most unsuitable theory. What we have here is simply a restatement of the 'triple alliance' of believing nations spoken of in xix. 23–25.—Men of stature] Comp. xviii. 2, Herod. iii. 20.—In chains] With a primitive love of symbol, these 'proselytes' put chains upon themselves, to represent the new bonds of affectionate reverence which attach them henceforth to Israel.—Unto thee shall they pray] An unparalleled expression. It is not, however, to Israel as a collection of human beings, but as divinised by mystic union with Jehovah (comp. on xlv. 11), that prayer is to be offered. The prophet could not have said 'Unto you shall they pray,' but he can venture (for the conception of mystic union was familiar to his readers) on the unusual expression, 'Unto thee shall they pray' (comp. Rev. iii. 9 with xix. 10). Delitzsch most aptly compares 1 Cor. xii. 12, where Christ is used synonymously with the mystical body of Christ, i.e., the Church. See further Last Words, vol. ii.—(Yet) surely] As in liii. 4; Hebr. 'akēn.—Thou art a God that hideth himself] The Sept. paraphrases thus, 'For thou art God, and we knew it not. Following the hint thus thrown out, we may explain the passage as follows: 'Thou, O Jehovah, art indeed the Strong One, but until now thou hast concealed thy strength both from thy people and from us [or, simply, from us]. We in our ignorance thought that thou wast only the weak god of a prostrate, insignificant people. But now we are forced to acknowledge that Israel's God is the absolutely Strong One, able and willing to deliver (or, save) all who trust in him.' The nature of this deliverance (or, salvation) is indicated in vv. 16, 17.—This explanation seems to do the most justice to phraseological usage. The word for 'a God' in the Hebr. is not Elohim (the Godhead), but El (the Strong One); it is the same which is used in the phrase, 'in thee is God.' The expression 'who hideth himself' must be interpreted by the analogy of other passages where its meaning is quite clear (see viii. 17, liv. 8, Ps. lv. 1, and comp. Isa. xl. 27). Its signification, thus determined, is 'who seems unmoved by the sufferings and the prayers of his servants;'; it is, in fact, equivalent to 'who holdeth his peace,' and the verb 'to hold one's peace' is used in xlii. 14, lvii. 11, of Jehovah's apparent neglect of his people during the Babylonian Exile. Hence it may occur to some to take v. 15 as an exclamation of the prophet, suddenly struck by the contrast between this bright vision and the glowing reality of the closing period of the Exile:—in the words of Calvin, 'Nunc exclamat

Isaias, longâ patientiâ opus esse.' This view is plausible, and if it were not for the phrase, 'O God of Israel,' which follows, and for the abruptness of the transition introduced, it would be worthy of adoption. But on these two accounts the verse must be a continuation of the speech of the converted heathen, and if so, the phrase 'who hideth himself' must receive a somewhat wider meaning than usual. This involves no violence to the fundamental notion, which is simply that Jehovah gives no sign of his operations, but whether from the point of view of Israelites or heathen, must be determined from the context. In the above paraphrase I have taken account of both points of view, but I am not sure that it was necessary to do this; hence the alternative words in parenthesis.—Delitzsch and Dr. Kay give the phrase 'who hideth himself' the sense of 'mysterious,' and regard the passage as a cry of admiration by the prophet or the church at the splendid and far-reaching consequences of the Babylonian Exile. St. Paul's 'O the depth of the riches' (Rom. xi. 33) would be the best commentary on the text thus interpreted. But, besides the objections mentioned above to a change of speakers, I fail to see the requisite points of contact for this view in the phraseology of the context.

<sup>14</sup> Thus saith Jehovah, The labour of Egypt and the earnings of Ethiopia, and the Sabeans, men of stature, shall pass over unto thee and become thine: after thee shall they go, and in chains pass over; and unto thee shall they bow down, unto thee shall they pray: 'Of a truth in thee is God and there is none beside—no Godhead at all. <sup>15</sup> (Yet) surely thou art a God that hideth himself, O God of Israel, saviour!' <sup>16</sup> Ashamed and also confounded are they all; gone into confusion together are the artificers of images: <sup>17</sup> Israel is saved through Jehovah with an eternal salvation; ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded unto all eternity.

into a state of captivity, of peace. —With an everlasting salvation] The 'everlasting God' (xl. 28) cannot but give an 'everlasting salvation.' But if so, the redemption must be spiritual as well as temporal; otherwise Israel would infallibly incur the same penalty again.

vv. 18–25. The foregoing predictions are justified. The chosen people cannot be rejected for ever, nor can Israel dwell in the midst of a desolated world: 'Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit' (xxvii. 6). The prophet, however, takes his starting-point, not at the call of Israel, but at creation. Jehovah made the earth as a dwelling-place for man. He then chose Israel to 'seek his face,' and to this 'seeking' he attached certain promises, viz., the salvation of Israel, and through Israel of the Gentile world. Vv. 20, 21 are parenthetical; they contain a renewal of the invitation in chap. xli. to a debate on the respective claims of Jehovah and the idol-gods. The digression was suggested by the reference to Israelitish prophecy in v. 19, but the connection is clearer without it.

<sup>18</sup> For thus saith Jehovah, who created the heavens (he is the Godhead), who formed the earth and finished it (he arranged it, he created it not as a chaos, he formed it to be inhabited): I am Jehovah and there is none beside. <sup>19</sup> Not in secret have I spoken, in a place of 'the land of darkness'; I have not said unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me as chaos; I am Jehovah, who speak justly, who announce uprightly.

* So Naeg.—Established, Ew., Del., &c.

† So Del., Naeg.—A, Ges., Ew., &c.

<sup>18</sup> Thus saith Jehovah] The contents of this revelation are at first given imperfectly. The main point is not merely 'I am Jehovah,' but 'Turn to me, who am the only true God, and ye shall be saved' (v. 22). He is the Godhead] i.e., the God of gods, the true God. Hebr. hā'-elōhim (not hā'-el, as in xlii. 5).

—Arranged it] Like a lodging for a friend. The sense of preparation is proved by Deut. xxxii. 6, and (Hifil conjugation) xiv. 21, and xliii. 16, 1 Kings v. 32, vi. 19 (g.).

—Created it not as a chaos] i.e., not to continue a chaos (Hebr. lōhū; see on xxiv. 10). Neither here nor in Gen. i. 2 is any chaos thrown on the origin of lōhū.

Not in secret] So xlviii. 16.

—In a place of the land of darkness] So in Deut. xxx. 11–14.

Moses recommends 'this commandment' as being both plain and accessible:—'It is not in heaven, that thou shouldst say, Who will go up for us to heaven and bring it unto us . . . neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who will go over the sea for us, &c.' The prophet, as it were, supplements the words of Moses, and declares that Jehovah's Torah, or prophetic revelation, is not to be obtained by any occult arts from Sheol or the Underworld. For the phraseology, comp. Job x. 21, Ps. lxxxviii. 12.—The best commentary on alt.

rend. is Jer. ii. 31, where Jehovah pathetically exclaims, 'Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness?' i.e., Have I not been the source of light and happiness to my people, and all temporal blessings' (comp. Jer. ii. 6)? But it seems doubtful (to say the least) whether the context allows us to interpret the phrase in this sense. 'A land of darkness,' without further explanation, cannot mean 'the desert,' which is only 'dark' (i.e., miserable) to one who is not a Bedawi. —Seek ye me as chaos] God is as far from meaning the faithful 'seeking' of his people (comp. Ps. xxvii. 8) to end in barren 'chaos' as he was from permitting 'chaos' to be the ultimate destiny of the world. Comp. the passage quoted above from Jeremiah, where the 'wilderness' is an image of unremunerativeness. —Who speak justly . . .] The heathen oracles are as obscure in their origin as they are unvaracious and disappointing. Those who deliver them say, as it were, 'Seek ye me as chaos.' But the revelations of Jehovah are the embodiments of 'righteousness' and 'uprightness.' So in the Discourse of Wisdom, 'The opening of my lips (i.e., that which I utter) is uprightness' (Prov. viii. 6), i.e., never deviates from the straight line of truth and righteousness. 'Speak' = promise, as lii. 6, <sup>20</sup> (Assemble yourselves and come; approach together, ye who are escaped of the nations:—they are without knowledge who carry the wood of their image and pray unto a god who cannot save. <sup>21</sup> Announce ye and produce it; let them also take counsel together: who hath declared this from aforetime, and long since announced it? have not I, Jehovah? there is no godhead beside me, a God that is righteous and a saviour; there is none beside me.) <sup>22</sup> Turn ye unto me, and be saved, all ye ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else. <sup>23</sup> By myself have I sworn, * a just word hath gone out of my mouth, a word that shall not return,* that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

* So Sept. (virtually), Ges., Hitz., Knob., Ew. (virtually).—TEXT has a superfluous ʾdv which spoils the parallelism. Del., following the accents, renders it, A word has gone out of a mouth of righteousness; Targ., Kimchi, Calv., A. V., Naeg., Weir, better, A word has gone out of my mouth in righteousness; (then continue,) and it shall not return.

<sup>20</sup> Assemble yourselves . . . ] See above on vv. 18–25.—The invitation is addressed to those 'who are escaped of the nations,' i.e., to the survivors of the great judgment on the heathen enemies of Jehovah which will immediately precede the final Messianic glory: comp. lxvi. 19, Zech. xiv. 16.—They are without knowledge] The truth to which those who had escaped could from their experience bear witness.—Who carry the wood . . . ] viz., in religious processions; see xlv. 1, Jer. x. 5, Am. v. 26. In line 30 of the Inscription of Mesha the same word, nāsā, is used of the Moabitish god Chemosh. Comp. the description of the procession of shrines of Egyptian gods in Wilkinson's note on Herod. ii. 58 (Rawlinson).

<sup>23</sup> By myself have I sworn] Jehovah swears 'by himself' ('because he could swear by no greater,' Heb. vi. 13), when the accompanying revelation is specially grand, or specially hard to believe. The phrase occurs also in Gen. xxii. 16, Jer. xxii. 5, xlix. 13; comp. the cognate expression, 'As I live, (saith Jehovah),' Num. xiv. 21, 28, Deut. xxxii. 40 (Q.P.B.). In the present case it introduces the abolition of the last vestige of nationalism in the true religion.—A just word . . . ] Comp. 'who speak justly' (v. 19). The clause occurs again in Sept. after Prov. iii. 16, as the first half of a new verse.—Shall not return] i.e., shall not miss its aim (as lv. 11).—Every knee shall bow] i.e., in homage, as 1 Kings xix. 18, Phil. ii. 10. A similarly 'universalistic' prophecy is found in Dan. vii. 14. But though the submission is universal, the context shows that it takes place subsequently to the great judgment on Jehovah's obstinate enemies (see on v. 20).—Every tongue shall swear] Carry forward 'unto me,' and understand 'allegiance,' as in xix. 18; comp. Phil. ii. 11.

each one come, &c.] These are probably the words of the prophet, not of the converted heathen. Taken together with the next verse, they contrast the fates of the servants and the obstinate enemies of Jehovah.—Each one] i.e., each of the adversaries.

<sup>25</sup> In Jehovah] i.e., joined to Jehovah in mystic union (comp. on v. 14).—All the seed of Israel] Including those who have, according to vv. 6, 14, attached themselves to the true Israel. Comp. on xlv. 5.—So justified] lit. 'be righteous,' i.e., be treated as such (comp. xliii. 26 in the Hebr.).

CHAPTER XLVI.

Contents.—A picture of the fall of the Babylonian idols, on which a powerful appeal is based in favour of the true God. A further argument from prediction, and a warning to the unbelievers, conclude the chapter.

vv. 1-2. The scene of this first paragraph is laid in Babylon. The prophet is an imaginary spectator, whilst the most venerated idols are thrown down by the conqueror and carried away in triumph. This, no doubt, was in those times an ordinary event (comp. note on x. 10, and see Hos. x. 6, Jer. xliii. 12, xlviii. 7, xlix. 3, 2 Sam. v. 21), but Babylon had thought herself exempt from the common lot of Oriental empires (xlviii. 8)! (It is difficult not to think of the last strange journey of these desecrated images; comp. the picture of 'The Procession of the Bull beneath the Mound of Nimroud' in Layard's Nineveh and its Remains.)

things are borne as a load—a burden for the weary! <sup>2</sup> They have crouched, they have bowed down together; they have not been able to rescue the burden, and their soul hath gone into captivity. <sup>3</sup> Harken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, who are borne as a load by me from the womb, who are carried from the lap;

Marduk); comp. Jer. l. 2, where the two names occur in synonymously parallel lines. The latter was the tutelary deity of Babylon, which Nebuchadnezzar calls 'the city of Marduk.' Originally a solar personification, Marduk was afterwards localised in the planet Jupiter,<sup>1</sup> and later still, when Babylon had grown in importance, identified with a member of the supreme divine triad—Bilu or Bel.—Nebo] The Hebraised form of Nabu, the Babylonian Mercury, and the patron-deity of Borsippa. Nebuchadnezzar calls himself once 'Nabu's darling.' The name undoubtedly means 'the revealer' (compare Hebr. nābhi 'prophet'); originally, perhaps, the revealer or precursor of the Sun-god (Sayce).—Their idols] i.e., not the images of Bel and Nebo, but the idols of the Chaldeans. 'This is according to usage. The suffix points always to the worshippers of the idols, and not to the divinities supposed to reside in them; as in Ps. cxv. 4, Mic. i. 7, Isa. x. 11, 1 Sam. xxxi. 9' (Dr. Weir).—Your carried things]

i.e., the images which used to be carried by priests and nobles in solemn procession (see on xlv. 20). These have now to be resigned to common beasts of burden; hence they are said to be, not 'carried,' but 'packed up as a load.' According to Herodotus (i. 183), the massive golden image of Bel (or, as he calls him, Zeus) was carried away by Xerxes.

<sup>2</sup> They have not been able to rescue . . .] For a moment the prophet assumes the point of view of the heathen, and distinguishes between the deity and his image. He means to say that if Bel and Nebo had been really gods, they would have interposed for the rescue of their images—for surely the massiveness of the 'load' would not constitute an obstacle! But no, they are not gods at all:—so the prophet adds, their soul, i.e., all that there was of a 'soul,' or a personality (iii. 9), in them, hath gone into captivity. Comp. Jer. xlviii. 7. 'Chemósh shall go forth into captivity;' so xliii. 12.

vv. 3-4. Jehovah's providential care of his people—what a contrast to the impotence of the idol-gods! Note the meaning repetition of the terms already used in vv. 1, 2.

<sup>3</sup> All the remnant . . .] The 'house of Israel' is not to be identified with the ten tribes (Kimchi). Throughout II. Isaiah, the captives of Judah (not of course excluding the Judahites who had been left at home) appear as the heirs (conditionally on their loyalty to Jehovah) of the Divine promises to Israel. 'All' is prefixed to meet the case of some timid Israelite hesitating to appropriate the words of comfort (Naeg.)—Who are borne . . . from the womb] The figure of the infant and the nurse recurs in lxiii. 9; comp. Deut. i. 31, Ex. xix. 4, Ps. xxviii. 9 (and perhaps lxviii. 19, where St. Jerome 'portabit nos'), Hos. xi. 3 ('I took him upon mine arms'). Tender as it seems, it is inadequate to represent Jehovah's affection. The devoted

'(and even to old age I am the same, and even to grey hairs I will bear; I have made, and I will carry, and I will bear, and will rescue.) <sup>5</sup> Unto whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and match me, that we may be like? <sup>6</sup> Those who pour out gold from the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, they hire a goldsmith to make it a god; they fall down, yea, they worship. <sup>7</sup> They take it upon the shoulder, they bear it, and set it in its place, that it may stand and not remove from its place: yea, one crieth unto it, but it cannot answer, nor save him out of his trouble. <sup>8</sup> Remember this, and <sup>a</sup> be deeply ashamed <sup>a</sup>; take it, ye rebellious ones, to heart. <sup>9</sup> Remember former things of old; how that I am God, and there is none else—the Godhead, and there is none like me; <sup>10</sup> who announceth the future from the former time, watchfulness of the parent naturally dies away when his child has come to maturity, and the parent is commonly removed by death when his offspring has attained to old age. Not so with Israel and Jehovah. Israel is always the object of the motherly care and affection of his God (comp. xlii. 14, xlix. 15, lxvi. 9, 13). Hence the qualifying words in v. 4, even to old age I am the same (lit. I am He; see on xli. 4). See a striking parallel in Ps. lxxi. 18 (the speaker in the Psalm is the personified people; see v. 20, where Hebr. text reads 'us'), and cf. Hos. vii. 9.

vv. 5-7. The images of Bel and Nebo remind the prophet of those subtle Jewish idolaters (the 'rebellious ones' of v. 8), who thought to worship Jehovah under outward symbols. It is remarkable, says Naeg., that the prophet's controversy with idolatry both begins and ends with an attack upon its most refined form (see xl. 17, &c.).

<sup>7</sup> They take it upon the shoulder . . . ] The images of Jehovah are as powerless to help themselves and others as those of Bel and Nebo.

<sup>8</sup> The argument for the sole divinity of Jehovah (as opposed to all idols, even those representing Jehovah) is about to pass into a new, a positive, phase. But first of all, the prophet emphatically commends the negative proof just given to the attention of his readers, especially of the idolatrous section (rebellious ones, as in i. 28). Then (v. 9) with a second 'Remember ye,' he repeats the argument from prediction (comp. xli. 21-29, xlii. 9, xliii. 8-13, 19-21, xliv. 6-10, 24-28).

<sup>9</sup> Former things ] i.e., Jehovah's past mercies to Israel (comp. xliii. 18).—I am God ] Or, developing the Hebr. name El, 'the absolutely strong' (comp. xlv. 14).—The Godhead ] Hebr. Elohim, 'the absolutely to be revered' (comp. Gen. xxxi. 42, 'the Elohim of my father . . . and the fear of Isaac.') and from aforetime things that are not yet done ; that saith, My purpose shall stand, and all my pleasure will I perform ;<sup>11</sup> who calleth a bird of prey from the sun-rising, the man of his purpose from a far country ; I have spoken, I will also bring it to pass ; I have formed, I will also accomplish it.<sup>12</sup> Harken unto me, ye obdurate ones, who are far from righteousness : <sup>13</sup> I bring near my righteousness, it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry ; and I appoint in Zion salvation, unto Israel (I give) my glory.

<sup>10</sup> Who announceth the future . . . ] Who, from the very beginning of a new period of history, announce the far-off issue, which

<sup>11</sup> A bird of prey] So Nebuchadnezzar is called an eagle (Jer. xlix. 22, Ezek. xvii. 3). According to Xenophon (Cyrop. vii. 1, 4 ; Anab. i. 10, 12), the ensign of Cyrus and his successors was a golden eagle. — Formed] i.e. purposed, as xxii. 11, xxxvii. 26.

<sup>12</sup> It is as if the 'house of Jacob' addressed in v. 3 had refused to listen to the Divine oracle. Jehovah, therefore, renews his address in another tone. 'Obstinate as ye are,' he says, 'ye shall not succeed in thwarting my purpose.' — Ye obdurate ones] Lit. 'strong-hearted,' which may mean either proud, courageous (as Ps. lxxvi. 5), or, as here, slow of understanding, stupid' (comp. vi. 10). 'Hard-hearted' is also used in a bad sense in Ezek. ii. 6 ; 'stiff-hearted' in Ezek. iii. 7. A similar figure occurs in xlviii. 4a. The paraphrase of Henderson and Delitzsch, les esprits forts, is too definite as well as too modern. — Far from righteousness] i.e., from the salvation which Israel's God has promised, 'righteousness' and 'salvation' being two aspects of one and the same blessing. The 'distance' lay in the unbelieving hearts of these Jews ; comp. liv. 14, 'be far from (the dread of) oppression.' Dr. Kay refers to xxix. 13. — I bring near . . .] 'For near is my salvation to come, and my righteousness to be revealed,' lvi. 1.

A long and important inscription in Babylonian cuneiform, about two-thirds of which is preserved, enables me to correct and supplement my notes on these passages. The clay cylinder on which it occurs was found (broken) in one of the Babylonian ruins in the summer of 1879, and is now in the British Museum. Sir Henry Rawlinson read a paper on the subject before the Royal Asiatic Society, and his brother, Professor Rawlinson, published an article upon it in the Contemporary Review for January 1880. From the latter I copy the portions which specially illustrate Isaiah. 'My wide-spreading rule was peacefully established throughout Dintir and the many districts of Sumir and Accad. Their good order was not disturbed. The high places of Babylon, and all its fortresses, I maintained in good preservation. . . . To the work of repairing the shrine of Merodach, the great lord, I addressed myself. To me (Cyrus the King) and to Cambyses, my son, the offspring of my heart, and to my faithful army [the God] auspiciously granted his favour, so that we succeeded in restoring the shrine to its former perfect state. . . . Many of the kings dwelling in high places, who belonged to the various races inhabiting the country between the Upper Sea (i.e., the Mediterranean) and the Lower Sea (the Persian Gulf), together with the Kings of Syria and the unknown (?) regions beyond, brought to me their full tribute at Kal-anna (the central part of Babylon), and kissed my feet. . . . The Gods who dwelt among them to their places I restored and I assigned them a permanent habitation. All their people I assembled, and I increased their property; and the gods of Sumir and Accad, whom Nabonidus had introduced at the festivals (or processions) of the Lord of the Gods at Kal-anna, by the command of Merodach, the Great Lord, I assigned them an honourable seat in their sanctuaries, as was enjoyed by all the other gods in their own cities. And daily I prayed to Bel and Nebo, that they would lengthen my days and increase my good fortune, and would repeat to Merodach, my lord, that "Thy worshipper, Cyrus the King, and his son Cambyses. . . ." This is merely a state-document, and it leaves us uninformed as to the hidden springs of action of the great Persian monarch. It is therefore still possible, in Professor Rawlinson's opinion, that he was actuated to some extent by religious sympathy with the Jews, who certainly approached nearer to Zoroastrianism than any of the other nations. There is, however, no trace of this in the inscription, which contrasts strongly with the 'proclamation of Cyrus' in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23, Ezra i. 1-4. How is this contrast to be accounted for? Shall we follow Ewald, who maintains<sup>1</sup> that this edict was 'coloured' by the compiler of Chronicles and Ezra, or Professor Rawlinson, who declares that no Oriental subject would dare to meddle with a royal decree? Both theories are built upon assumptions; Ewald's assumption being that the passages in 2 Chron. and Ezra are derived ultimately from the Persian archives, and Professor Rawlinson's that the Books of Chronicles and Ezra are of the age of Ezra.<sup>2</sup> The former assumption implies a moral backwardness on the part of the Chronicler which, though not incredible, is at least not to be admitted without necessity, while the latter compels us to a non-natural interpretation of the passage in chap. xlv of Isaiah. The question is complicated with the 'higher criticism,' and is therefore not to be settled here, nor perhaps anywhere, unless indeed the original 'proclamation' of Cyrus respecting the Jews should one day come to light.

If the author of the inscription may be trusted, Cyrus was a thorough indifferentist in his religious policy. As Professor Rawlinson puts it, he was 'so "broad" in his views, as to be willing to identify his own Ahura-mazda, the Maker of Heaven and Earth, the All-Wise, All-Bounteous Spirit, alike with the One God of the Jews, and with the CHIEF god of any and every religious system with which he came into contact.' He goes even beyond the Assyrian kings in his universal toleration. Sargon, as we have seen (on x. 10), did not really undeify foreign gods, and even arranged (under very special circumstances, see 2 Kings xvii. 16-28) for the propagation of the religion of Jehovah ; but Ashur was to be acknowledged by all subject nations as supreme. Cyrus, too, is bound to admit that Ahura-mazda is 'chief of the gods,'<sup>1</sup> but he interprets this religious phrase in a most refined way. Every supreme god is Ahura-mazda under another name—Merodach is Ahura-mazda, and so, we might go on to infer in the spirit of the inscription, Chemosh is Ahura-mazda, and Jehovah is Ahura-mazda.

It was a natural result of such indifferentism that the idols of the conquered nations were left in their sanctuaries. Bel and Nebo are even admitted to a sort of inferior divinity in Cyrus's syncretistic religion (see the last sentence in his inscription). Yet the prophet evidently assumes that Bel and Nebo will be carted away as so much secular plunder. Professor Rawlinson, it is true, does not think this so evident. He takes the passage to mean simply that 'the old Babylonian and Assyrian creed had sunk from a dominant to a subject religion, had become one of many tolerated beliefs.' Is not this a non-natural interpretation of the very strong language of the prophecy? Why not admit that precisely as the prophet in x. 10 involuntarily makes Sargon to speak as an Israelite, so here, from the intensity of his faith, he fails to realise the possibility of religious indifferentism?

CHAPTER XLVII.

Contents.—Song on the fall of Babylon, in four strophes or stanzas—
I., vv. 1-4 ; II., vv. 5-7 ; III., vv. 8-11 ; IV., vv. 12-15.

HERE the thread of thought is broken (comp. xlv. 11, 12 with xlviii. 1-8) by a lyric outburst, proceeding mainly from that chorus of celestial beings, traces of which are visible throughout the prophecy (see on xl. 3). It is a 'taunt-song' corresponding to the ode on the King of Babylon in chap. xiv., except that this has the imperative tone of higher beings, whereas that was the emotional vent of liberated slaves. Ewald, regarding the prophecy to which chap. xlvii. belongs as a production of the Exile, declares that 'though formed upon such models as Ezek. xxvi. xxxii., it ranks the highest poetically among all the similar voices of song which in chaps. xl.-xlv. find utterance' (Die Propheten, iii. 63). Del. remarks, 'Isaiah's artistic style may be readily perceived both in the three clauses of v. 1, comparable to a long trumpet-blast (comp. xl. 9, xvi. 1) ; and also in the short, rugged, involuntarily excited clauses that follow.'

<sup>1</sup> Come down and sit in the dust, O virgin-daughter of Babylon ; sit on the ground without a throne, O daughter

unrelenting determination. To 'sit in the dust' is here not, as in iii. 26, a sign of mourning (Ges.), but of humiliation (Hitz., Ew., Del., Naeg.). Comp. 'I raised thee from the dust' (1 Kings xvi. 2), parallel to 'I raised thee from the midst of the people' (1 Kings xiv. 7).

Take the millstones] The special work of female slaves. See Ex. xi. 5 (with Kalisch's note), Job xxxi. 10, Matt. xxiv. 41, Odys. vii. 104, and comp. Van Lennep's Bible Lands, vol. i. p. 87.—Remove thy veil] Laying aside all feminine modesty. First of all, however, she must wade through rivers, i.e., struggle as best she can to the scene of her servitude.

<sup>3</sup> A common image for the lowest degradation; so iii. 17, Jer. xiii. 26, Nah. iii. 5, Ezek. xvi. 37, xxiii. 10, 29, Lam. i. 8.—I will take vengeance] Here it is no longer the chorus, but Jehovah who speaks. These reverses of Babylon are a just retribution; they are the 'vengeance' of an offended God.—Neither shall I meet any] Any, that is, who can resist me. The ellipsis is harsh, but is more agreeable to the context than that assumed by the rendering of Gesenius. Comp. lix. 19, Jer. v. 1.

<sup>4</sup> As for our Goel . . .] The joyous exclamation with which the earthly chorus of faithful Israelites greet the appearance of Jehovah. Babylon has no Goel; Israel's Goel is Jehovah Sabáoth. [This connection, however, seems a little forced. The song would rather gain than lose by the omission of the verse, which may possibly be a marginal note by a sympathetic scribe, which has made its way by accident into the text.]

<sup>5</sup> Sit silent . . .] Another scene, drawing out a fresh contrast between the busy hum and brilliant variety of Babylon's former life and her present desolation.—Enter into darkness] The 'darkness' from which the Jews were just released, xlii. 7, 22 (Ew.).

<sup>6</sup> I was wroth . . .] The first of two reasons for Babylon's reverses. She had exceeded the limits of her commission, 'for I was wroth a little, and they helped on misfortune' (Zech. i. 15). A similar charge is brought against Assyria (x. 6, 7).—Upon him that was aged . . .] Is this to be taken literally? The writings of Jeremiah and Ezekiel do not suggest that the Jewish exiles were great sufferers. Perhaps the prophet may refer to the cruelties which disfigured the first days of the Babylonian triumph (comp.

them into thy hand : thou didst not show them compassion, upon him that was aged thou didst make thy yoke very heavy. <sup>7</sup> And thou saidst, I shall be <sup>e</sup> for ever, a lady perpetually : thou <sup>e</sup> wast not concerned about these things, neither didst thou remember the issue thereof.

Lam. iv. 16, v. 12) ; or possibly the conduct of the Babylonians varied, according to the flexibility and submissiveness of the conquered ; or, again, the description may be symbolical of the distress of the Jews, somewhat as xlii. 22. Against the un-Biblical view of Ges. and Hitz., that the 'old man' is the people of Israel, it is enough to refer to xl. 28, xli. 4 (with Del., Naeg.).

<sup>7</sup> The guilt of Babylon is intensified by her reckless arrogance. She presumed that the colossus of her power would never be broken, forgetting the danger of provoking the God of gods.—Perpetually] Hitzig's rendering involves no change of the words, but only of the grouping. The construction of the Masoretic text is as awkward as in the parallel case of Gen. xlix. 26 (see Q. P. B.) See crit. note.—These things] viz., thy cruelties, or, the inevitable retribution attending them.

<sup>8</sup> I and none besides] In form the utterance agrees with those of Jehovah (xlv. 5, 6, 18, 22), but the meaning is obviously very different. There it is, 'I am the only true God ;' here, 'I am an irresponsible despot.' There is a parallel passage in Zeph. ii. 15, but it is questionable whether any inference can be drawn as to the date of II. Isaiah.—Sit as a widow] i.e., in mournful solitude (comp. Lam. i. 1), deserted by the merchants, who once flocked to Babylon. It is a figure from polyandry. Comp. xxiii. 16, and the imitation in Rev. xviii. 7.—The loss of children] The people of Babylon are the 'sons of Babylon ;' comp. li. 18-20, liv. 1, 4.

<sup>9</sup> In their perfection] i.e., in the full extent of their bitterness.—Thine enchantments] Babylon was famous for its quasi-scientific development of astronomy, astrology, and all kinds of magic. See Lenormant, La magie chez les Chaldéens (Par. 1874), Chaldean Magic (Lond. 1878), La divination et la science des présages chez le Chaldéen (Par. 1875) ; Sayce, 'The Astronomy and Astrology of the Babylonians' (Trans. Soc. Bibl. Arch. iii. 145, &c.), 'Babylonian Augury by means of Geometrical Figures' (op. cit. iv. 302, &c.) ; Babylonian Literature (Lond., 1878).—Spells] Comp. Ps. lviii. 5 (6), 'the charmers, (even) him that is versed in spells and trained.' The root means binding ; comp. κράδεσμος, though we need not suppose that 'magic knots' are expressly intended.

<sup>10</sup> And thou 'hast been secure' in thine evil, and hast said, None seeth me; and thy wisdom and knowledge, they perverted thee, and thou hast said in thine heart, I and none besides: <sup>11</sup> but there cometh an evil upon thee, 'which thou hast not the knowledge to charm away,' and there shall fall upon thee a mischief, which thou shalt not be able to appease, and there shall come upon thee suddenly crushing ruin, of which thou shalt not be aware.

' So Alexander, Naeg.—Hast trusted, Ges., Ew., Del., &c.

' So Hitz., Ew., Del., Naeg., Weir.—Of which thou knowest no dawn, Vulg., Vittr., Ges., &c.

<sup>10</sup> Thou hast been secure in thine evil] Obs. the prophet denies any restraining power to the religion of the Babylonians so far as relates to their conduct towards other nations. Among themselves, however, they were in one sense very religious,—θεοσιδαμονοῖστέροι. The hymns translated by Lenormant and Sayce prove the existence among both the Assyrians and the Babylonians of a genuine moral sentiment towards the gods.—Alt. rend. does not yield a good sense, for how could 'evil' or 'wickedness' as such be a source of confidence? And even if we take 'evil' as a synonym for tyranny or for magic, yet why should the Babylonians be represented as saying, 'None seeth us'? Surely 'he who relies upon his power or his cunning as a complete protection will be not so apt to say "None seeth me," as to feel indifferent whether he is seen or not' (Alexander).

<sup>11</sup> An evil cometh] In antithesis to the 'evil' of which Babylon had been guilty (v. 10).—To charm away] The Babylonians boasted of their knowledge—both mundane and supramundane, but 'knew not' a remedy against this unforeseen calamity. In the Hebr. this verband that in the parallel line present a striking assonance (shākhrah—kāp- prāh).—Alt. rend. is, apart from the context, the more obvious one. But it is unnatural to say that the 'dawn' of a calamity means its end, nor is this objection removed by comparing viii. 20, lviii. 8. The parallelism suggests a word analogous to 'to appease,' and the Arabic actually has a word exactly corresponding to the Hebrew root (sahara—shakhar), and with the required meaning.

<sup>12</sup> The last strophe has a strongly ironical tinge, reminding us of Elijah's language to the priests of Baal (1 Kings xviii. 21 &c.).—Persist, I pray, in thy spells—if one does not succeed, another may; perchance thou wilt strike terror, viz., into the enemy.

<sup>13</sup> The multitude of thy consultations] The 'consultations' here referred to are scarcely astrological ones, as Sayce (T. S. B. A. iii. 150) supposes. The construction of the sentence (comp. also xix. 11) seems to show that astrology is here the final resource of the despairing Babylonians.—The extent to which astronomy and astrology were cultivated by the early Babylonians and Assyrians has been of late revealed by cuneiform study. As early as the 16th century B.C. it had become necessary to construct a 'standard astrotitude of thy consultations ; let them, I pray, stand forth and save thee—the dividers of the heavens, the star-gazers, who make known, at every new moon, things that shall come upon thee. <sup>14</sup> Behold, they are become as stubble, the fire hath burned them ; they cannot rescue their soul from the clutch of the flame : it is not a coal to give warmth, a fire to sit before. <sup>15</sup> Such are they become to thy loss about whom thou hast wearied thyself ; they that have been thy traffickers from thy youth—flee staggering every one to his quarter, there is none to save thee.

logical work,' which consisted of 70 clay tablets, and was deposited in the library of the reigning king Sargina or Sargon of Agane.—

The dividers of the heavens] Alluding to the signs of the zodiac (of primitive Babylonian origin), or to some other division of the sky for astrological purposes. — Who make known, at every new moon] The calendar of the Semitic Assyrians and Babylonians was borrowed by them from the primitive non-Semitic Accadians. The Accadian year 'contained 360 days and 12 months, each of which is noted as being lucky or unlucky for commencing a campaign, attacking a city, and expecting prosperity for a fortified country or city' (Sayce's paper, as above, p. 160). The prophet apparently refers to the reports which the official astronomers at the various observatories in the empire were required to send in, every month, to the king. We still possess many such Assyrian reports (Sayce, p. 229), and there can be no doubt that the later Babylonian empire had the same astronomical and astrological arrangements as its predecessor (comp. Dan. ii. 2 &c.). Some of the reports confine themselves to the astronomical facts ; others expressly mention political occurrences which the appearance of the sun or the moon foreboded.
